A Change of Heart is episode number of the Happy Tree Friends television series. An emergency heart transplant for Disco Bear presents Dr. Lumpy with a whale of a time!

Ensemble cast[edit] The main cast members were familiar to television viewers before their roles on Friends, but were not considered to be stars. All six actors appear in every episode. Rachel Green Rachel Karen Green Jennifer Aniston is the spoiled but warm-hearted and likeable daughter of a rich vascular surgeon and his wife. She eventually becomes a buyer at Polo Ralph Lauren. She decides to move in with Ross, even though the two are not involved in a relationship. Their daughter, Emma, is born during the eighth-season finale. During the tenth season, Rachel is offered a job with Louis Vuitton in Paris. She accepts and prepares to move herself and Emma to France. However, in the series finale , she declines the job offer and famously "gets off the plane". Rachel and Ross get back together in the final moments of the series. Monica Geller Monica E. Geller Courteney Cox is the younger sister of Ross and best friend of Rachel, the latter of whom she invites to live with her after Rachel forsakes her own wedding. She works primarily as a chef at a variety of restaurants. She is described as the mother hen of the group, [18] and is known for her obsessive-compulsive and competitive nature. Despite the twenty-one year age difference, Monica and Richard are happy, and her parents accept their relationship. However, as a result of Monica yearning for a family but Richard having already had one, they break up at the end of the second season. Monica and Chandler try to hide their relationship from the rest of the group for much of the fifth season, but eventually everyone finds out. After celebrating their first anniversary in Las Vegas , they move in together and get engaged by the sixth-season finale. After their marriage, Monica and Chandler try to conceive children, only to discover that they are unable to do so. In the final season of the series, they adopt two children, whom they name Erica and Jack. Phoebe Buffay Phoebe Buffay-Hannigan Lisa Kudrow is an odd, ditzy albeit sweet-natured masseuse who grew up homeless, sometimes telling her friends outlandish tales of life on the street. She is an aspiring musician who plays the guitar and sings songs with somewhat unusual lyrics at the coffee shop. She has an identical twin sister, Ursula also played by Kudrow , who is just as odd as Phoebe and appeared as a recurring character on Mad About You. After a series of dates and relationships with a number of men, Phoebe meets Mike Hannigan Paul Rudd in season nine, whom she eventually marries in season ten. She also became a surrogate mother for her half-brother Frank Jr. Giovanni Ribisi , giving birth to his triplets in the fifth season. Matt LeBlanc is a good-natured but not-so-bright struggling actor and food lover, who becomes mildly famous for his role as Dr. Drake Ramoray on a fictionalized version of Days of Our Lives. Prior to his role on Friends, LeBlanc appeared as a regular on the short-lived TV , a minor character in the sitcom Married Chandler Bing Chandler Muriel Bing Matthew Perry is an executive in statistical analysis and data reconfiguration for a large multi-national corporation. He later quits his job and becomes a junior copywriter at an advertising agency. Chandler is known for his sarcastic sense of humor. Chandler is often depicted as being somewhat of a hapless individual, suffering a lot of bad luck while struggling through life and occasionally struggling with an on-and-off smoking addiction. However, he eventually falls in deep mutual love with Monica and proposes to her at the close of season six, with the two of them marrying at the close of season seven. By the end of series, he and Monica adopt twins, whom they name Jack and Erica. Ross Eustace Geller, Ph. David Schwimmer is a paleontologist at a museum of prehistory, and later a professor of paleontology at New York University. The most intelligent of the six main characters, but at the same time a clumsy, quirky man, Ross is known for being a smart, know-it-all who prides himself on his rationality, despite his clear hopeless romanticism. He is shown to be the most caring of all the six members in the various instances on the show. He has three failed marriages during the series, and his relationship with Rachel is a main storyline throughout the series. In the series finale, Ross and Rachel finally reconcile, deciding to be together once and for all. The character of Ross was developed with David Schwimmer in the minds of writers and Schwimmer was also the first actor to be cast on the show. Schwimmer is the only cast member native to New York City. Jack is more balanced in his attention and care towards both Ross and Monica. Due to his gnawing guilt, Jack develops a secret smoking habit and decides to gift Monica the Porsche. Despite being favored throughout his entire childhood, this makes Ross insanely jealous. Their relationship hits a rough patch when he and Rachel consider getting back together. Rachel is invited to the wedding, but receives a cold reception for jilting Barry while she is there, and a ridiculous speech from Ross which bemuses everyone in the room does not exactly improve the situation for her, until she, in a desperate attempt to salvage some pride, walks onto the stage where the microphone is and starts singing. He has also been called "Barry White", and is possibly[original research? Barry is portrayed as a horrible, selfish little man who cheats, lies, and belittles other people. Getting both Rachel and Mindy to fall for him also suggests[original research? Carol dumped and divorced Ross to be with Susan. Susan does not attempt to hide her contempt of Ross and vice versa, but they briefly put aside their differences when Carol gives birth to a boy, whom they all agree, after weeks of argument, to name Ben. Though Ross and Carol are on good terms after their divorce, Ross continues to resent Susan for losing Carol to her. It was just an opportunity to tell a really interesting story. Jessica Hecht originally auditioned to play Monica. The manager of the Central Perk coffee house, who first appears as a background character in "The One with the Sonogram at the End". He is a former actor who once played Bryce on All My Children before that character was "killed in an avalanche. James Michael Tyler was cast as Gunther because he was the only extra who could competently work the cappuccino machine on the Central Perk set. The Seattle Times ranked Gunther as the eighth best guest character of the series in Marcel[edit] Marcel live animal actor: A Capuchin monkey that Ross initially keeps as a pet, [e 15] and who provides comic relief for his geeky master. One time Rachel loses him in the city, [e 16] and calls Animal Control" only to learn from Ross that Marcel is an illegal exotic animal that cannot be kept in the city. In a later season Ross questions why he had a monkey as a pet. Janice is one of the few characters besides the six main friends who appears in all of the Friends seasons. Their relationship lasts into the third season, when Janice decides to leave her husband to be with Chandler. Later, Joey sees Janice kissing her husband, who runs a mattress business. In a later episode, the tables are turned on the annoying natured Janice when she has a brief fling with Ross shortly after he has broken up with Emily, as he is unhappy and spends the entire date complaining about everything, causing her to find him insufferable and leave him Ross had expected the reverse to eventually happen, but had been happy to date someone who listened so well to him in the meantime. As Monica and Chandler make plans to have children, [e 29] she offers Chandler advice and support at a fertility clinic. Presumably due to being amused by their wacky, quirky, goofy personalities, Janice seems to enjoy spending time with the six friends, which is somewhat ironic and very much inconvenient for them since none of them can stand to be around her although she seems to be completely blind to the fact that they feel this way, showing almost no awareness whatsoever of the fact that they hate having to put up with her , due to the unbearably irritating nasal New York accent she speaks with, and her annoying machine gun laugh. Heckles[edit] Mr. He usually states that items are his, and when the other person states that he does not have one, Mr. Heckles says that he could have one. For instance, when Rachel and Phoebe are searching for the owner of a lost cat, Mr. Paolo[edit] Paolo Cosimo Fusco: Terry[edit] Terry Max Wright: Monica tries to wean him off drinking but regrets it when he becomes extremely boring. Monica then began drinking on their dates, so that she could sit through his mind-numbingly dull stories. Seven years later, he returns to New York for a brief visit and shares an evening with Phoebe. She first appears in "The One with Mrs. Bing", [e 43] where she meets the gang while on a book tour in New York. After dinner, she kisses Ross. Phoebe refers to Ursula as her " evil twin. Joey becomes attracted to Ursula and they start dating. Ursula tells Phoebe that she is bored with Joey and sarcastically claims that he is smart enough to figure this out on his own without her having to actually tell him implying his stupidity irritated her, hence her naturally nasty reaction , so Phoebe pretends to be her sister to let Joey down gently. Ursula next appears briefly in "The One with the Jam", [e 47] where she is being stalked by a man David Arquette who mistakes Phoebe for her. Phoebe naively begins a relationship with the man in question, but ends it with him when he cannot get over his obsession with Ursula. Phoebe is horrified that Ursula has told Eric that she is a teacher, a member of the Peace Corps , a non-smoker, and attends a church group all lies. The series finale of Mad About You , set 22 years into the future, reveals that after a successful porn career, Ursula becomes Governor of New York. Mindy and Rachel were best friends while growing up and their friendship is tested after Rachel discovers Mindy and Barry are seeing each other. She asks Rachel to be her maid of honor and dress in a garish pink dress. Steve[edit] Steve Jon Lovitz: In , Monica tries to impress him in an attempt to get a job at his restaurant, and Phoebe tells him he is welcome to go to her apartment and try her food there, but he gets stoned on the journey there and consequently acts obnoxious. At the end of the episode, Phoebe punishes him by giving him a very painful massage. He is first mentioned in the second episode of the series, [e 8] but only appears twice: In "The One with the Flashback", [e 7] it is learned that he used to be "Cute Naked Guy", but then, in , started putting on weight. For many years, the identity of the actor that played him in his extremely limited appearances was a mystery. It was speculated that Michael G. Hagerty , the actor who played Mr.

How Friendships Change in Adulthood but you might go that long without contacting a friend. Still, survey upon survey upon survey shows how important people's friends are to their happiness.

That, after time spent with this person, you feel drained, empty, belittled or insulted. Friendship is universal in humanity. Young children start friendships with the sharing of curiosities, toys, and laughter. I believe that friendship, throughout our lives, serves as a mirror of our very essence. The love, laughter, and concern we share with friends gives us a sense of self which can sometimes be thwarted within our family relations. In the years I have worked as a therapist, the friends of my patients have filled my practice space with their presence as fierce defenders, continual cheerleaders, and often lifesavers. So why do some friendships change and even end after long periods of time? We have probably all had friends in our lives who were so involved with us during certain periods that the thought of that person no longer being around seems impossible. However, just like many other human relationships, friendships are quite complicated and can be fraught with conflict and tension at times. There are countless reasons why even some of the more enduring friendships come apart at the seams. On the most basic level, friendships can change when two people grow apart from each other. This can happen when friends meet and get close during certain periods of their lives because they are sharing common experiences together. This may include growing up in the same area, going to school together, being on sports teams, etc. Hopefully, this change occurs slowly and naturally over time and without much stress attached. Proximity is also very important in creating and maintaining close connections with friends. Sometimes, physical distance creates a wedge between us. The more painful termination of friendships has to do with more complex psychological and emotional issues and are often fraught with anxiety and great distress. Unfortunately, as in all human relations, this balance can sometimes shift and no longer benefit one or the other in the relationship. For example, a friendship can go along smoothly until one half of the pair comes into some circumstance where social or financial status shifts. How two friends deal with the change of fortune for one or the other is a delicate mission. Here jealousy, envy, and insecurities may arise creating tension where none existed before. As we go through life, we realize that some friends are always there when things go wrong for us but cannot stand it when our luck changes for the better. Likewise, some friendships cannot tolerate the loss of status, position or standing of the friend. A more deeply held psychological construct is that of who we pick in the first place to be our friends. Until we become psychologically aware and more evolved, we may pick the wrong people to befriend as a way of working out unresolved interpersonal issues from our pasts. As we become more emotionally healthy, those friendships will no longer be tolerable. For example, when one has low self-esteem, they may pick critical friends as a way of reinforcing their negative self-view. However, if one grows more confident, this dynamic may no longer be acceptable. In essence, our friends are the life-affirming fountain from which we drink. Good friends fill us up with warmth, honesty and a sense of well-being. If you feel drained, empty, belittled and insulted by a friend you should acknowledge that this is diminishing your life experience and not enhancing it. In this case, I would move away from this person, honor whatever good you did get from them in the past, and move toward those friends in life that only want to help light your way! Stephanie finally gets to stay home alone for two days - with her friends over. What do you think ends up happening?

This article was originally published on August 12, Bumping this one to the top to make sure it gets read again today. You might be a terrible friend and not even realize it. That should scare you. Right now you should be sweating profusely, pacing the floor, and asking yourself whether or not you know how to be a good friend. Sometimes our actions and the words that escape our mouths stop going through a filter. We get so used to our friends that we become insensitive to the things we say and do. Sure, that level of comfort can be a good thing, but at the same time a lot of ugliness can start leaking out. Check out some of the signs below and see how many of these apply to you. After a while you start assuming that because you think a certain way, your friends and others do too. Eventually, you begin to blame others and talk about how they went and did something even though they never did. This gets annoying and yes, your friends do notice this. You start criticizing or blaming them for everything. Everything wrong is because of them. Then you start letting them know, even non-verbally, how you feel about the situation. This is how you lose friends. You only spend time with them when you need something. There is always a reason to call or text. You evade all responsibility, leaving them to handle it all. You never think about how they may feel. Your words hurt like knives and you might not even know it or care, because you have a disregard for how they may feel. So many things to be mindful of! Are you losing track? You could begin to wear down the friendship if the other person feels like you constantly show off or downplay their accomplishments. People have enough insecurities and self-esteem issues as is. Tossing in a question to make it seem like you care is insincere. You never stick to your word. Punctuality goes into this too. Send them a text, a phone call even better, or surprise them by showing up at their front door. Make an excuse to spend time with them. It just means showing you want them to be okay. Some people are very good at hiding their negative emotions. Masks get heavy when you wear them for so long and sometimes you forget how to take it off. I used to put on a brave face when I was going through rough times. Know when to be serious and when to be goofy. No cheap attempt at being funny to avoid the real issues. Be mature and aim at finding common ground instead of trying to divert the attention elsewhere. Go the extra mile when they ask for help. When they ask for your opinion or help on something that means something. It means they value what you think. If someone hands you an essay asking for you to help proofread or revise it then go the extra mile. Bust out a red pen and start marking it up like crazy. This means never half-ass things when it comes to your friends. This annoys some people and eventually they give up, but good friends keep trying. Make them feel wanted. This means you listen to everything they say intently. You show you like being around them. Hell, sometimes even say it outright. Understand and respect boundaries. Be honest and constructive when needed. You care about their lungs. Do you want them to crash and burn later or would you rather let them suffer an ego hit, fix their act, and get out there in full confidence? If you feel like criticisms are harsh, offer them tips on how to improve. Introduce them to others. Remember, you want to be proud of being in public with them. Jump to the rescue when asked. I called people I knew would come to my aid because they were the type to help. Those who I knew would have an excuse. Which brings me to my next point! Be okay with gaps in conversation. Silent gaps will naturally occur in a conversation. Be comfortable with them. Especially as an introvert, I need time to recharge after spending time with a lot of people. I really enjoy my time, but I need to recharge my batteries on occasion. With that in mind, learn the real differences between introverts and extroverts. You may have the wrong idea. Be dependable punctuality and keeping promises. Being unreliable will make your friends think twice before asking you for something. Learn how to apologize. It takes a lot to admit you did something wrong. It happens to the best of us. We all get too caught up in our own lives and forget how to show appreciation. Be invested in their successes and show in your facial expressions that you really are happy. Show small gestures on occasion. It can be as simple as buying them something you thought they might like. That would tell me a lot of things. First, I know they remember what I enjoy. Second, they were thinking of me. Third, they spent their hard-earned cash to let me know they like me. Start saying yes more often to your friends and make time for them. After all,

Inspiration when you need it. Either we move to a new city or we just decide that in order to get to the next level in life, we need friends that can support that change. In this article, I want to share with you some of the best lessons I learned through the years. These lessons allowed me to get rid of loneliness, have the friends and the fun I wanted, and hang out with people who understand and appreciate me, for me. As people move away, change jobs, develop new interests, or get in new relationships, they start to fade out from your life. You need to always be connecting with new people, and spotting the ones that could become close friends. The best way to do that is to join a community of people that meet on a regular basis with many members who are interested in the same thing. On the web, you can find communities about anything—hiking, health, sports, yoga, relationships, science, and so on. What you do is join a community, and attend their events. These places are the easiest and the most genuine for meeting new people. If you start talking to someone and find that he or she can be a good friend to have, then use my double-commonality technique. This technique allows you to create a potential and a basis for a friendship. As you talk to that person, try to find a second commonality or theme you can connect on. If the event is about bicycling, for example, and you find out that you both also like to drink green smoothies, then you have just found a great basis for a friendship. At that point, it makes a lot of sense to stay in touch and meet again. This is critical, because people have trouble remembering the all people they know. It works best if you do it at the start of the week, so you can make plans for the week and invite those you want to see. A critical piece to add to this is that you start introducing the people you know to each other. As you meet new people, connect them up to each other or to the friends you already made in the past. People will stay around you much more in a group of friends, rather than in the context of individual friendships. How to Meet New People Effortlessly You may know already that going out to meet new people takes some courage and motivation. Most of the time, your mind will try and come up with all different kinds of reasons why not to go out to meet new people. With this technique, you not only join the group, but you also join the organizing team of that group! This works like crazy, because it literally forces you to attend the events and meet new people. Once you commit to being part of the team, you no longer need to motivate yourself to show up; you just do it. Most of these people are just volunteers, and they would love to get extra-help from you. More Tips and Techniques—I would love to share with you more techniques for overcoming hesitation and meeting new people through my Free Social Skills Newsletter. In it, I will show you the best techniques and strategies for meeting and making friends.
