After considering whether to put the issue to voters next spring or wait until , it appears board members favor the later date. They discussed their options at a meeting last week. Board member Ted Wenta said he thought the vote should occur in Pam LeSesne, board president, said the board needs a lot more time to think through what construction projects and other improvements to include in the next bond issue. She said she supports waiting until or later. The program enables high school students to earn college credit simultaneously with high school credit for advanced courses. The NACEP accreditation validates the quality of college courses offered in participating high schools. EvCC was one of 11 colleges and universities nationwide to receive the accreditation. She strives to influence others with her positive energy. Wolitarsky has earned a full-ride scholarship at Central Washington University. There she hopes to pursue her goal of becoming as a physical therapist. What is most important to you? We meet once a week to appreciate staff and students. We do anything to help brighten their day. I also do Link Crew. It helps show the freshmen around. I want to make a difference in this world. I want people to remember me. What things have you done to achieve that goal? I love giving blood, so I helped organize the blood drive this year. We collected 64 units of usable blood. With each unit, three lives can be saved. I understand you are working on a water project? We have about 40 kids participating. You get a wristband for taking the challenge to drink only tap water for two weeks. The money you save on drinks is then donated to The Water Project, which uses it to build a well. You also drink out of your own cup, which eliminates some pollution from water bottles. I feel really strongly about this project. I think everyone should have the ability to drink clean water. Tell us about your athletic endeavors. This year, I was the team captain and went to districts. I was voted best teammate. It was really cool to see the girls appreciate me in that way. My swim coach, Rob Serviss, has been really influential. That was a huge thing that helped me. I did hair and makeup, which got an honorable mention. It was great to be a part of that. What faith-based activities do you do? Those are an amazing time. I got to fly to St. Louis for one trip. I just love seeing the world. How have you done academically? I have a 3. I got an A-minus in advanced placement statistics, which was very troublesome. I would have been the valedictorian if I had gotten an A. I thought all my hard work had gone down the drain. But the dean of education at Central Washington University called not long after to tell me she wanted to offer me a four-year, full-ride scholarship because of my academic achievement. More information available at www. That was a huge surprise and a blessing. What are your future plans? I want to be a physical therapist. I shadowed a physical therapist this year and I really enjoyed it. What made you choose physical therapy? I really wanted to be in the medical field because I like helping people. My dream job is to be a traveling physical therapist because I love experiencing other cultures. What do you hope to take away from your high school experience? I was home-schooled through eighth grade. I came into high school a complete stranger to everyone. I want to do that for others. Being nice, considerate and respectful pays off in more ways than you can imagine. And living life to the fullest is by far the best way to go. Get fed, give feedback to Edmonds schools: The Edmonds School District is putting together its strategic plan, a key to future decisions and investments, and wants to hear from local residents. The flight of four P Mustangs is being organized by the Mukilteo-based Historic Flight Foundation at Paine Field, where the aircraft will take off at 9 a. Board member Carol Andrews said she worried that delaying the bond issue, and the projects it would pay for, would result in more crowding. The bond failure will benefit property owners. The bond issue rejection has another consequence. The proposed synthetic turf upgrades and lighting projects to sports fields at Cascade and Jackson high schools will be put on hold. Under safer conditions, crews could go in after the bodies. But College From Page A3 30 secondary schools in Snohomish County, and 2, students have earned college credit to date. Those approaches may later apply to other neighborhoods. Contributing to the problem are an array of social issues as varied as job loss, the scarcity of affordable housing, addiction and mental illness. The annual Point In Time homeless count conducted in January found more than people in Everett living outdoors or in a tent; 18 in motor vehicles or travel trailers; and three in abandoned buildings. The state does not do its own wildfire forecast for the year. Precipitation during the month of April was above average in most of Washington, the fire center said. Wildfire season actually began on April 15, and the DNR had already battled 20 small fires this year on state lands. The Malaga fire started Wednesday afternoon and burned power poles and power lines, knocking out electricity for a time to hundreds of homes and the Alcoa aluminum smelter near Wenatchee. The fire is believed to have been caused by lightning hitting a power pole. Helicopters were brought in to battle the blaze. The fire was mostly contained by late Thursday. No homes were burned and no injuries were reported. Last year, a total of fires burned approximately , acres of DNR-protected lands, the agency said. Of those, 94 percent were contained to less than 10 acres in size. Seventy percent of the wildfires on DNR-protected lands last year were human-caused, the agency said. The agency said dry and unhealthy forests in Washington will remain a fire hazard for many years. Weekly attendance has increased to about , compared to about a few months ago. Dorway grew concerned this spring after seeing petitions in circulation that urged the city to do more to address vagrancy and related issues. He plans to join the city-level discussions.

As his body fails, he tries to make sense of his life in order to communicate who he is in a letter to his one year old son. The challenge of this small blank white sheet of paper is a lot like the challenge of the large blank white cinema screens we have to fill with films each year. But what should I write now? How does one do justice to the story of how a little event born so long ago grew into the largest documentary festival in the world? To the 50, professionals who have come and gone and come back again? To the 10, staff members, volunteers and sponsors who have kept IDFA afloat for a quarter of a century? To the over 1. As for myself, I will try to pack 25 years of experience into a few paragraphs of reflection for this Foreword. A group of dedicated women – Adriek, Willemien, Miryam, Annelot and myself – along with some very dedicated guys and a few believing sponsors put that first edition together. We must renew and strengthen our own creative powers We must realize that there are two main currents by which the art of cinema is driven along: The one cannot do without the other. Over the years, IDFA has helped develop a space for the creative documentary, for documentaries with a social purpose, for films with meaning. We have helped develop a worldwide documentary community and a doc-media industry. Johan van der Keuken and Ken Loach gave workshops. It was a great success. Over the years that followed, the festival grew more confident and more professional. Rather than featuring the various competitions that we are now famous for, those festivals were about handpicking films from a few hundred entries. The programs were more about curating thematic series and looking backwards through retrospectives. Or we selected countries as case studies: Things continued to develop. In a few short years, we could actually afford something called a fax machine. The Docs for Sale catalogue became accessible. In , our platform program featured films from developing countries and 1, films were viewed by the pre-selection committee. In the early days, IDFA was more about social and cinematic history, but as it evolved it became a festival about the present. Each year we kept adding sections and events to please audiences and the ever-growing documentary industry. We take on the larger issues of our times. Today, we think more about the future than the present. And in this Foreword, we look forward. Whereas once we had films to choose from, advances in film technology and the democratization of production around the world now mean we have to consider over 3, films a year. The gatekeepers and gateways have opened up. Films are rushed to IDFA from almost every country on earth. These days, instead of programming thematic series, we select individual films as individual works of documentary art and information. The audience, too, is seen as a group of unique individuals who navigate their own ways through our modern catalogues on self-guided tours, selecting according to their own desires and needs. In effect, they create their own customized festival. We are there to lead and guide them, but not to dictate a cinematic canon. I am grateful that we have built IDFA over the years by standing on the shoulders of those who have inspired us, locked arm-in-arm with so many friends, colleagues and sponsors. The number of people I need to thank would fill up this whole catalogue. But actually, dear readers, it is you I wish to thank. You have your own documentary dreams to look forward to. Have a great IDFA 25! Lubberhuizen, Dr Ir J. Foundation, Amsterdam; Toltech Solutions B. displays a broad spectrum. He not only moves back and forth between cinematic forms and genres, but also between filmmaking, photography and writing and between gentler and more forceful tones. Maria Goos is one of the most renowned drama writers in the Netherlands. She wrote the hit plays Familie, Cloaca and De geschiedenis van de familie Avenier for theater company Het Toneel; the first two were also successfully adapted for cinema. Cloaca has been performed internationally since 1997. In 2001, she received the Gouden Ganzenveer, a cultural award. Most recently, she wrote the monologue Oumi for actor Nasrdin Dchar, about his Moroccan mother, and De hulp for 12 Sieger Sloot and Michiel de Jong, about the relationship between a banker and his cleaner. She is now working on the new television series Fink! He has published 26 books and made 45 films, most of which have been internationally distributed, winning critical acclaim and awards around the world. He is the recipient of a life-long grant from the Danish state for his achievements in filmmaking and has received lifetime achievement awards at several international film festivals. He is the co-author of Call Me Anna: His latest book is Free For All: The film has been acquired for distribution in over 50 countries. Currently, Entel is directing two documentaries, one in Ecuador and one in Haiti, as well as executive producing a third one for the Discovery Channel. His feature MANA: And perhaps his most famous film, Silverlake Life, co-directed with Tom Joslin and coproduced by Jane Weiner, is unanimously considered among the most important films about AIDS ever made. He is currently working on a feature documentary about stage director Robert Carsen entitled The Devil is in the Detail: Hedda van Genep is a Dutch freelance filmmaker with a history of over four decades as a producer and director for Dutch national radio and television. Between 1980 and 1990, she was a teacher at the Media Academy in Hilversum, and she offered training courses and workshops at Newtown Film School in Johannesburg. Samira Makhmalbaf first acted at the age of eight in The Cyclist, directed by her father, the celebrated Iranian filmmaker Mohsen Makhmalbaf. At the age of 17, she directed her first feature entitled The Apple and became the youngest director ever in the official section of the Cannes Film Festival. Since the Iranian government did not give her permission to film in Iran, Makhmalbaf shot her most recent film Two-Legged Horse in Afghanistan. In 2002, The Guardian listed her as one of 40 best directors in the world. Farah Nayeri is a senior arts correspondent and editor for Bloomberg News in London. Life, Love, and the Movies Lots of us bloggers have thought about how life, love, and the movies are intertwined. Now, I have an excuse to write about it. I swung by Mettel Ray and came across her post yesterday entitled just that. Of course, the only logical thing for me to do was swing by those sites and see what was going on. When I got there, I saw an open invitation to participate in the Life, Love, and the Movies blogathon. It started up yesterday. What was the first movie you saw in the cinema and what do you remember about that visit? The first movie I remember seeing in the theater was one I blogged about a couple weeks ago, Enter the Dragon. I remember that it was a triple feature! Man, those were the days. I have no clue what the other two movies were, or even if we stayed to watch them all. The only thing I really remember is being completely under the spell of Bruce Lee. Are there any movies you have very strong memories of which are not because of the movie for example something which happened at the time you were watching it? I have a few of these. When I went to see House Party, a huge fight broke out in the aisle less than 20 feet away from me. Another celebrity moment happened when I went to see Species. NBA star Grant Hill sat right across the aisle from me. More importantly though, it was the first date for my wife and I. I remember the eerie silence and stillness of the theater after the conclusion of The Passion of the Christ. It was the second weekend it was out and therefore after the shooting that took place in a Colorado theater where it was showing. My daughters were very concerned that something was going to happen. Which movies had a big impact on you and changed a small part of your view on life? I had not only experienced this, but often participated in this as a youngster. It was tough when I was young, but part of who I am, now. There are probably too many to name. If a movie would be made about your life, what type of movie would it be and who would you like to portray you? It would be a "dramedy" and plenty of the secondary characters would be outlandish people. Physically, Kevin Hart is about the closest thing to a match I can think of. Which existing movie best represents you? I have to return to Spike Lee again. In this case, two of his movies probably combine to do the trick. The first is Do the Right Thing and second is Crooklyn. I actually grew up in Queens, New York, not Brooklyn. Still, these two movies are perhaps the best representations of my formative years. If you knew you would die tomorrow, what would be the last movie you would want to see? I might have to go with Do the Right Thing. If you can spend your life working in the film industry, what would you be and why? I would definitely be a writer. Did you ever have a first kiss with someone while at the cinema and if so which movie was playing? What is your favorite movie relationship and why? I am also someone who now cherishes my relationship with my own son. It represents both ends of the spectrum for me. When did your love for movies start and how has it grown? It was just so huge in scope with really cool special fx, lots of action, the whole good vs. As a wee tyke all of six years old, it just blew me away. What remains with me specifically from Star Wars is the sense of wonder I have whenever I watch films with great special fx whether the movies themselves are any good, or not. If you have to choose one film to watch with your loved one, what would it be and why? Added bonus for me, I can get away with ogling Nia Long. If you can choose one character from a movie to be your significant other who would it be and why? What was the first movie that made you fall in in love with film and cinema? Star Wars really is "the one" for me. See my answer to question number three in this section. How did your passion for movies turn you into a movie blogger? A forum I used to frequent had a thread discussing movies. I started posting short reviews there. Before long, I created my own thread just for my reviews. At the time, I was working at Blockbuster and watching more movies than I ever had before. Continuing to do the reviews combined two of my great passions: It was only logical that I would become a movie blogger. What is your favorite date from a movie? Long, of course, and the very underrated and underused Larenz Tate. She regretted sleeping with him after their first date and wanted to see if there was something there besides sex. The two had just a wonderful "movie" date: You can also be down. Just follow the rules below:
