Berk had studied with Schillinger. Instrumental lessons and a few classes in traditional theory, harmony, and arranging were also offered. At first, most students were working professional musicians. Initial enrollment was fewer than 50 students, [12] but by there were more than students. In , trumpeter Herb Pomeroy joined the faculty and remained until his retirement in . Although far more emphasis is placed on academic credentials among new faculty hires than in the past, experienced performers such as Gary Burton , Pat Metheny , Arif Mardin , Aydin Esen , Joe Lovano , and Danilo Perez have served as faculty over the years. During this period, the school began to attract international students in greater numbers. For example, Japanese pianist Toshiko Akiyoshi arrived in . These albums contain early examples of composing, arranging, and performing by students who went on to prominent jazz careers, such as Gary Burton , John Abercrombie , John Scofield , Ernie Watts , Alan Broadbent , Sadao Watanabe , and many others. The series, which continued until , was a precursor to subsequent Berklee-affiliated recording labels. These later releases provided learning experiences not only for student composers and performers, but also for students in newly created majors in music engineering and production, and music business and management. During the s, the Berklee curriculum began to reflect new developments in popular music, such the rise of rock and roll , soul and funk , and jazz-rock fusion. The guitar department initially had nine students, and today it is the largest single instrumental major at the college. Guitarist Jack Petersen accepted an invitation by Lawrence Berk, founder of Berklee, to design and chair the first formal guitar curriculum at Berklee College of Music. Trombonist Phil Wilson joined the faculty in . The number of international students has grown steadily to . In , the school began offering classes online through Berkleemusic. Toward that end, Berklee offers student musicians courses of study toward a fully accredited four-year baccalaureate degree or professional diploma.
