Darkness on the Edge of Town is the fourth studio album by Bruce Springsteen, released on June 2, The album marked the end of a three-year gap between albums.

Barbour Among modern horror authors, few are as prolific as Brian Keene. He has been touted as the next Stephen King and the future of horror literature. His novels, such as Ghoul and The Rising, have been released to critical acclaim. In Darkness on the Edge of Town, Keene continues to write in an accessible and engrossing fashion that leaves the reader thirsting for more. Comparisons to Stephen King are not unwarranted. One day the inhabitants of Walden, Virginia wake-up to darkness. The world as they know it is gone. All communication outside the town of roughly 11, has ceased, and an inky blackness has settled across the sky and near outskirts. The residents do not know what has happened or why. Sigils, or runes, stand along the edge of town keeping the blackness at bay. Those foolish enough to cross these protective barriers are never seen again. However, their screams echo back from the darkness. There is no escape. Almost immediately, the fabric of society begins to tear apart. It is the apocalypse, a different kind of apocalypse but an apocalypse nonetheless. Resources begin to dwindle. Crime begins to rise. People begin to revert back to their more primal selves. What is causing them to behave this way? Is it the stress of the situation or something more sinister? Brian Keene is known for the utilization of cosmic terror in his writing. Darkness on the Edge of Town is no exception. While I will refrain from specifically naming the elder thing in Darkness, this particularly entity has also appeared in the works Ramsey Campbell and Howard Phillips Lovecraft, among many others. The biggest criticism of the book is its open-ended conclusion. There is no resolution. The reader is left with their own understanding and interpretation of what happened at Walden, Virginia. The parts are there, but this one is not a cohesive whole. While there is plenty to keep readers glued to the pages, Darkness on the Edge of Town fails to deliver the satisfactory ending. For fans of Keene, this probably matters very little. All of the little things are here, such as the pop culture references, the melancholy setting, and the homage to earlier horror writers. However, Darkness on the Edge of Town would not be the best recommendation for readers discovering Brian Keene for the first time. Try Ghoul or The Rising first to experience Keene at his best.

Before they can fight amongst themselves, the person responsible for this meeting, Rumpelstiltskin, appears with a plan to change their happy endings. The ladies are skeptical about his plan at first, but they listen and agree to join him. At a nearby mountain, Rumpelstiltskin points out to the ladies that the curse, concealed in an orb, lies within the deepest part of the area, but to reach it they must first get through a series of obstacles perfectly suited to their talents. After they complete the tasks, they hand the orb to Rumpelstiltskin, who reveals he was simply using them and leaves them to die at the hands of the demon Chernabog, the Guardian of the mountain. The ladies hide from the demon, who seeks the person with the heart that has the darkest potential, until Maleficent notices a large crack in the wall that would provide escape. The ladies come out of hiding and while Chernabog targets Maleficent, Ursula and Cruella escape. Maleficent, thinking they are abandoning her, fights off the demon until Ursula rescues her by using her tentacles to pull her to safety. Outside Storybrooke[ edit ] It has been six weeks since Mr. Gold was banished to the real world. However, they put their differences aside when Gold receives an e-mail he states will end their troubles. Following this, they go to Great Neck , Long Island , where they meet a distraught Cruella de Vil watching her belongings being seized by the FBI after her criminal husband is arrested. After Gold arrives to see her lose everything, he tells her about joining him and Ursula on a trip to a place where magic exists, Storybrooke, where they hope to seek out the author of the "Once Upon a Time" book, whom Gold believes ruined their lives in the first place and can give them their happy endings. In Storybrooke[ edit ] During the six weeks, long after Gold was banished from Storybrooke, the residents are shown to be going back to their regular lives. Henry going to school, Mary Margaret goes back to teaching, Regina resumes being Mayor of Storybrooke and Emma Swan continues her job as Sheriff and her growing relationship with Hook. Hook informs the two that they managed to get a professor to translate a counter spell to free the fairies from the hat, but only Regina can enact it. Unfortunately, just seconds after the fairies are freed, the hat releases a thick, black smoke that begins to ooze out, floating into the sky and forming the shape of the winged demon Chernabog, and starts flying away. She responds that the author and sorcerer are two different people and that the author had left behind clues to his identity in his works. The celebration is interrupted by earthquake-like thunder and strange cries. The people rush outside to find Chernabog perched on the clock tower. Realizing he must have been released from the hat, Emma asks if they can capture him again but Belle tells her that because he was released from the hat, he can not be placed back in. Emma and Regina attempt to use their magic to destroy the demon but quickly discover all they can do is temporarily repel it. Meanwhile, Gold, Cruella and Ursula arrive at the town limits, where Gold placed a marker on the tree after his banishment. Both Ursula and Cruella are skeptical at first to trust Gold, but since he was banned, he tells them that he has to trust them to enter Storybrooke first and then come back for him if they choose. Gold then hands Ursula his phone to call Regina, and the queens ask to enter Storybrooke, saying they have realized the error of their ways and have decided to turn over a new leaf and be good. Regina does not trust them but makes a reluctant deal to let them in if they can help destroy Chernabog. The queens inform them what Chernabog is looking for and Regina suspects he is after her because she has the darkness in her heart. This gives Emma the idea to coax the demon to the town border since a creature made of magic should disappear when crossing into a land without magic. Regina and Emma drive to the town border as Chernabog attacks them. As the demon smashes the windshield, Regina vanishes and reappears at the line, trying to distract him. Emma slams on the brakes as she approaches the border and Chernabog is thrown off the car and across the line, where he disappears. Regina and Emma see Cruella and Ursula standing on the other side of the town line, but both David and Mary Margaret, who have just shown up, are reluctant to let them, in which surprises Emma since they both always want to see the good in people. Hours later, the queens return and let Gold in using the same scroll. With that plan out of the way, Gold tells the queens that he, posing online as a professor with knowledge of translating ancient texts, was the one who told Belle how to free the fairies while releasing Chernabog at the same time, and plans to resurrects Maleficent and reveals that the Chernabog was actually after Emma, as Gold sees her as the one with the "darkest potential. If they do, Mary Margaret threatens to personally rip out each of their hearts. Cultural Reference[ edit ] In episode title: Bald Mountain is a real mountain in Blaine County, Idaho. Chapter 4 : Darkness on the Edge of Town (Once Upon a Time) - Wikipedia

The darkness at the edge of town in this sense is personal as well-at the edges, around the seams of everyone there is a darkness being held at bay by the internal architecture they have built.

It is the seventy-eighth episode of the series overall, and premiered on March 1, Contents [ show ] Synopsis With Gold banished from town, the residents of Storybrooke attempt to resume their normal lives. But when a terrifying darkness descends on the town, Emma and Regina are forced to confront the true nature of evil. There are major spoilers. In the Forbidden Fortress of the past, Ursula takes down a guard with her tentacles. The women struggle, during which Ursula reveals that she was invited to the Fortress, and Maleficent informs that she owns the castle and did not send for Ursula. The struggle is interrupted as two barking rottweilers run up to the women. Maleficent points her staff at them. Just then, Cruella De Vil approaches and Maleficent stands down. Cruella employs some kind of breath charm on the dogs, calming them. She then demands to know why she is at the Forbidden Fortress. As she menaces the other women, calling them trespassers, Rumplestiltskin appears, calling for peace. Maleficent deduces that Rumplestiltskin has assembled the trio. In present-day Storybrooke, citizens try to go about more "normal" lives. Hook waits outside the pawnshop with coffee for himself and Emma. Emma continues on and Hook enters the library with Belle. In frustration, he knocks the board off the wall. He laments that six weeks have passed and the nuns are still trapped. Hook calls himself "weak", for having let Mr. Belle agrees, and laments that she, too, was influenced by Mr. Gold when she should have known better. The pair agree that they were blinded by love. Hook tells Belle that, despite how terrible Mr. Gold was, he did love her. In present day New York City, Mr. Gold microwaves himself a cup of Ramen in a small apartment filled with fish tanks as Ursula enters. He further claims that Ursula is fortunate that her desires align with his. As he eats his noodles, the nearby computer pings, indicating an email. Ursula inquires, and Mr. Gold and Ursula approach a large white mansion. Cruella wrests a black and white fur coat from one agent, claiming it was hers "before". Gold and Ursula approach Cruella, and Mr. Gold offers to return her "glory" if she joins them. Cruella refuses, and Mr. Gold apologizes for their last meeting, and claims their interests are aligned again. He claims he is there to "put an end to having everything taken away". Cruella then opens her garage, revealing her custom Zimmer Golden Spirit. Gold inquires where Cruella is going with her "paltry possessions", to which she replies "to get myself some less paltry possessions". Gold calls this an empty pursuit, and that she will end up back where she started. He claims he can help her get back everything and more. Cruella rebuffs him, pointing out that there is no magic in this world. He tells her that, in fact, there is, if you know where to look. Maleficent claims that Rumplestiltskin is powerful, but not that powerful, and Ursula agrees. As Rumplestiltskin dances around revealing his plan, Cruella positions herself very close to his face, declaring that she is quite content with her life and does not like to be toyed with false promises. Rumplestiltskin claims that there is nothing false about what he is promising, and that he knows "exactly" what all three of the women want. He elaborates that each of the women can keep their secrets, and he declares that they want what all villains want, "to win", and that he can show them how if they work together. Maleficent interjects that, even if the group did work together, no spell can do what Rumplestiltskin claims. Rumplestiltskin agrees, but informs her that they are not looking for a spell, they are after a curse. He further claims that, if the women help, this Dark curse can give them their happy endings. In the present day, Cruella, Ursula and Mr. Gold wait in line at a Mr. Gold how he can be sure this new plan will work when all the others have failed. Gold claims that they failed in the past because of the mysterious Author. The women order their meals in the drive-thru, and Mr. Gold tells them to hurry up, as he is certain that the Author is in Storybrooke and they need to get to him "before the heroes do". In the Office of the Mayor in Storybrooke, Regina pours over the storybook as Emma puts lunch on her desk. Unable to open the bottles, Emma searches for a bottle open. Opening a drawer, she finds a taped together storybook page with an illustration of Queen Regina and Robin Hood engaged in a kiss. Emma asks if Regina has heard from him, and a tearful Regina replies "No". Just then, Hook and Belle burst into the office, claiming to have a way to get the fairies out of the hat. Belle explained that she found an incantation in an ancient tongue, and that a professor of linguistics had emailed her a translation. She claims that it is an ancient ceremony that will bring the nuns back if Regina enacts it. Belle gives Regina the Dark One Dagger , and Regina passes it over the hat before touching it with the blade. A few moments later, a blast of light emerges from the hat. As the group shields themselves from the light, the nuns appear around the rock. The nuns are clearly shaken, and the Mother Superior thanks both Emma and Regina. As the nuns hug, a wave of black smoke seeps from the hat, unseen by the group. It coalesces into Chernabog and the creature flies away. The quartet approaches a door covered in blood scarabs, and Rumplestiltskin asks Cruella to use her " powers of persuasion " to clear the way. Cruella approaches and a single scarab crawls up to here. She breathes her magic upon it, and the scarab rejoins the group, scattering the creatures and opening the door. The group passes through, coming upon a large chamber with an orb containing the Dark Curse. A wall of fire blocks their passage. Rumplestiltskin explains that the fire is forged from the breath of dragons, and calls upon Maleficent. Maleficent steps forward, her arms outstretched. The flames channel around her and into her dragon-topped staff. Finally, Rumplestiltskin turns to Ursula, who uses a tentacle to grab the orb from where she stands and give it to him. Just then, a rumbling is heard. When the women inquire as to what is happening, Rumplestiltskin informs them that he is leaving and they are "about to die". He elaborates that the Chernabog also guards the Dark Curse—“an ancient demon that "seeks out the heart with the greatest potential for darkness and devours it". He reveals that this is the true reason that he needed the three women. He leaves the chamber, the door closing behind him as the Chernabog manifests before the trio of women. In the present day, Cruella and her passengers drive along the woodland road that leads into Storybrooke. Gold instructs Cruella to stop the car, she does, and the trio approaches a small tree with a tie attached to a branch. Ursula looks about the empty road, asking where Storybrooke is. He explains that the town line is just up the road, but is cloaked by a protection spell—“it cannot be seen or entered. Neither of the women appear to believe him, and he explains that, the night he was banished he attached the tie to the tree so he could one day find his way back. Ursula ask how they are supposed to enter the town without magic. Suddenly, Cruella pulls out a pistol, demanding that Gold be completely honest with them. Cruella points out that, outside Storybrooke, Gold is powerless and can be killed, and a visibly shaken Gold agrees. Cruella asks him who banished him and why, and Ursula suggests that it was his " little maid ", and asks if she is the reason they are there. Gold replies that he is there for the same reason the women are—“his happy ending, and what it is his business, just like their reasons are theirs. Cruella withdraws her gun and tells Mr. Gold to start talking. In the main dining room, amidst the celebration, the Mother Superior sits alone in a booth. Henry Mills encourages his mother Regina to approach her. Regina, holding a blank storybook, presents it to the Mother Superior and asks if she knows what it is. The Mother Superior asks if the Sorcerer is in town, and Henry replies that his house is, but he himself has not been found. Regina reveals that she is hoping the Sorcerer can write her a happy ending, as the book seems to have great power.
