

Chapter 1 : What Your Destiny Number Reveals About Your Life Purpose - Felicia Bender

Some things are best left unknown, and some things just cannot be explained, for He knows, and He sees and He is the greatest of planners, the Giver of Life, the Creator of Love, the Master of Destiny- Allah the most High, Most Merciful.

It was written in the s and submitted for possible publication to Znamya magazine around October What is the point of me being physically free when the book I dedicated my life to is arrested I am not renouncing it I am requesting freedom for my book. Hitler and Stalin had previously signed the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact which, on the face of it seemed to be advantageous to both. There has been much speculation on the Soviet response. So, though they had increased military spending, they did not yet have an army that could benefit from this. This was compounded by the change in command structure that Stalin initiated in the wake of the purges and maintained for large periods up to Political commissars operated alongside military commanders. Throughout the book there are references to the decaying city and the damage from aerial bombardments and artillery based around the city. There are also occasions in the Russian novel in which the German blockade is quite noticeable. The characters suffer from starvation and thirst. The historical figures include Joseph Stalin and Adolf Hitler. Many of the characters are more loosely based on a historical figure, or a representative Russian. Grossman also includes another German concentration camp where one of his main arguments takes place concerning communism and fascism. Grossman devotes large sections of the book to the prisoners held at Soviet and German labor and concentration camps, which is necessary for a holistic understanding of the time and events. Shtrum is married to Lyudmila. He works as a nuclear physicist and is a member of the Academy of Sciences. He is constantly thinking about his exploration of nuclear physics. This obsession with his work is obvious from the very start of the novel through the thoughts of Lyudmila, from whom he has drawn apart. He is at times an unsympathetic man - self-absorbed, irritable, difficult to live with - yet he is also deeply human, struggling to remain true to himself while navigating the innumerable moral quandaries of life in Soviet society. The war also forces Shtrum to come to terms with his Jewish heritage, largely through the traumatic loss of his mother, who was murdered by the Nazis in Ukraine. Viktor learns this through her last letter to him; Grossman has her suffer the same fate as his own mother, [23] who was killed in similar circumstances. This passage is both one of the most iconic and the most devastating in the novel. As the story goes on, Viktor also becomes increasingly aware of the latent anti-Semitism of the world in which he lives. This is her second marriage. She was originally married to Abarchuk, who has been sent to a Soviet labor camp. In the beginning of the novel, it is clear that Lyudmila and Viktor have drifted apart. Lyudmila discusses how Viktor and his mother, Anna Semyonovna, always showed a preference to Nadya and ignored Tolya. For a long time afterward, she talks to Tolya constantly, sometimes out loud, a habit which Viktor finds hard to cope with. She was originally married to Nikolay Grigorevich Krymov, but when the reader is introduced to her in the novel, she is in a relationship with Colonel Pyotr Pavlovich Novikov. Yevgenia had a good relationship with Jenny, but after the old woman is deported, along with other Germans living in Kuibyshev, Yevgenia lives alone. Although she is a beautiful, charming, and highly intelligent woman, Yevgenia has much trouble acquiring a residence permit or a ration card. After many run-ins with Grishin, the head of the passport department, she is finally able to get these documents using societal connections. She receives aid in acquiring official documentation from Limonov, a man of letters, and Lieutenant Colonel Rizin, her boss at the design office - both of whom are romantically interested in her. As the novel goes on, Zhenya shows herself to be both a strong and profoundly sympathetic character. He is described as having large and distinct features: He has two daughters and a young son. His family lives in Ufa, where his comrades take care of them when Getmanov is away. Getmanov comes off as a strong supporter of the Party. Thus, he is very cautious about what he says and what those who are associated with him say, because he does not want to offend the Party or Stalin in any way. This is obvious when he is discussing politics with his friends before leaving for the front. When one man discusses how his young son once abused a picture of Stalin, Getmanov is overly critical and says that this behavior, even from a youngster, should not be tolerated. Getmanov is also quite arrogant. He feels insulted at being appointed the commissar to only a tank corps. It may be possible to see Getmanov as a portrait of Khrushchev, who had been chief political officer during the battle for Stalingrad. He was arrested in and sent to the gulag. Abarchuk is a strong supporter of the Party. He feels as though he has been wrongly imprisoned, yet does not fault the Party for its actions. He believes that such erroneous arrests are justifiable in the large scheme of party stability. He refuses to even allow Tolya to take his surname, for Abarchuk believes that this might hurt his standing and party image. He insists on doing what he sees as his duty to the state by denouncing Barkhatov, even though this will likely cost him his life. In the beginning of the novel, Sokolov and Viktor are good friends. In general, however, Sokolov is more cautious than Viktor; it is only at the end of the novel that he finally dares to risk his social position for the sake of his convictions. He is the first major character that the reader is introduced to and he appears in the very beginning of the novel. Mostovskoy was involved in the revolution of and had strong ties to the Communist Party, having worked side by side with Lenin. Although the living conditions in the camp are unspeakable, Mostovskoy is reasonable and optimistic. He says that the great mixture of prisoners in the camps, all from different ethnic, political and religious backgrounds, leads to an interesting environment. He can use his knowledge of foreign languages in the camp and he can attempt to understand new perspectives. Those inside the camp, including Mostovskoy, are extremely interested in what is going on in the war. Mostovskoy is constantly involved in philosophical arguments with fellow prisoners such as Major Yershov and Ikonnikov, a former Tolstoyan. He is eventually singled out by the German officer Liss for a strange series of one-on-one conversations, during which Liss holds forth regarding what he sees as the essential similarities between Stalinism and Nazism. Sofya Osipovna Levinton When the reader first meets Levinton, she is in a train on the way to a German death camp. On the train, Levinton meets a six-year-old boy named David. Sent to spend the summer with his grandmother, he was left cut off from his mother in Moscow after the rapid German advance through Ukraine. Over the course of the novel, Levinton grows to love David as a son. When, at the camp, the Germans offer to spare certain prisoners of value such as doctors, but she does not save herself; rather, she stays with David and heads with him to the gas chamber to die. This sequence of events in Life and Fate is especially powerful. It demonstrates how human compassion can rise above the atrocities that defined World War II. A kind of gruff chivalry is added to his other virtues. As a courageous and resourceful soldier, he inspires total devotion in his men, to the alarm of Krymov, who sees this as subversive. Tension forms between Krymov and Grekov as the novel progresses, because Grekov desires to act independently, and is deeply suspicious of the repressive state bureaucracy that Krymov represents. Krymov seems to be a "good communist", with a history of near-fanatical ideological commitment to the Party. Indeed, his perceived callousness in this regard caused Yevgenia to leave him. However, he grows progressively more disillusioned as the novel goes on. Furthermore, he worked alongside Mostovskoy in the earliest days of the Bolshevik Party, placing him in a compromising position due to his association with various now-discredited figures. Thus, he must watch everything that he does and says. Despite extensive torture, Krymov consistently refuses to confess to a fabricated series of treasonous acts. Although Yevgenia believes herself to be over Krymov, she constantly thinks about him, and ends up going back to him despite his arrest. Getmanov seizes upon this and reports Krymov, with devastating consequences. While he believes that he is getting closer to her, the reader realizes that Yevgenia is slowly drifting away from him in favour of Krymov. Plot summary[edit] The novel at heart narrates the history of the family of Viktor Shtrum and the Battle of Stalingrad. It is written, despite attempting to get away from it, in the socialist realist style, which can make it seem odd in parts to western readers. Life and Fate is a sprawling account of life on the eastern front, with countless plotlines taking place simultaneously all across Russia and Eastern Europe. Although each story has a linear progression, the events are not necessarily presented in chronological order. Grossman will, for example, introduce a character, then ignore that character for hundreds of pages, and then return to recount events that took place the very next day. Thus, it is difficult to summarize the novel, but the plot can be boiled down to three basic plotlines: Although Life and Fate is divided into three parts, all of these plotlines are featured in every section. Viktor Shtrum is a brilliant physicist who, with his wife, Lyudmila, and daughter, Nadya, has been evacuated from Moscow to Kazan. He is experiencing great difficulty with his work, as well as with his family. He then receives a letter from his mother from inside a Jewish ghetto informing him that she is soon to be killed by the Germans.

Lyudmila, meanwhile, goes to visit her son from her first marriage, Tolya, in an army hospital, but he dies before her arrival. He consistently compares political situations to physics, and remarks that Fascism and Stalinism are not so different. He later regrets these discussions out of fear that he will be denounced, an indecision that plagues his decision-making throughout the novel. Suddenly, Viktor makes a huge mathematical breakthrough, solving the issues that had hindered his experiments. After moving back to Moscow, however, the higher-ups begin to criticize his discoveries as being anti-Leninist and attacking his Jewish identity. Viktor, however, refuses to publicly repent and is forced to resign. He fears that he will be arrested, but then receives a call from Stalin himself presumably because Stalin had sensed the military importance of nuclear research that completely, and immediately reverses his fortune. Later, he signs a letter denouncing two innocent men and is subsequently racked by guilt.

Chapter 2 : Discovering Your Life Purpose and Destiny

*From My Heart: A Tale of Life, Love and Destiny [Sudhir Choudhrie] on theinnatdunvilla.com FREE shipping on qualifying offers. The greatest achievement is to still be alive - and what's more, living with purpose to focus on family and personal growth. Sudhir Choudhrie knows better than most the meaning of survival against the odds.*

Inability to key into a sense of independence, individuality, and creative gifts. Can become critical, judgmental, and cynical. Can wrestle with addictions. The 1 Life Path needs a cheerleader. They need praise and positive reinforcement. The 1 Life Path is creative and needs encouragement to follow their unique vision. This person can have a temper. A 1 Life Path is a natural leader, so naturally! On the downside, this person can lean toward narcissism and can develop a sense of dealing with people and situations with criticism and judgment. They can also have issues with self-defeating tendencies and addictions. This stems from a lack of self-confidence. Your primary purpose is to develop your sense of love, harmony, diplomacy, and balance in whatever you do. The 2 Life Path thrives when serving the needs of a group. You seek love and have an open and giving heart. The 2 is the number of partnership. Wants harmony, balance, and for everyone to get along. Attempts to please everyone to the exclusion of knowing what they personally want. Over-gives and then withdraws with resentment. Can become childish, self-centered, and aggressive. The 2 Life Path is someone you can count on. They are givers who love to please. This person is often family and intimate partner-centered. This person can be co-dependent and a worrier. They also can be a champion micro-manager if you allow it. They can over-give and then withdraw. They can hang on to old stuff with resentment. The key to their over-all personal evolution: Defining, setting, and acting upon healthy emotional boundaries. Your primary purpose is to develop your sense of creative self-expression and emotional sensitivity in whatever you do. The 3 Life Path thrives in the spotlight with performance, entertaining, or any creative and communicative endeavor having to do with the spoken or the written word. The 3 Life Path is the number of joy and is in its element when socializing, hosting, and communicating. Is feeling best when inspiring and uplifting others. Emotions are at the heart of your life. Debilitating self-doubt and over-thinking analysis paralysis. Emotional highs and lows. Difficulty following through with tasks. The 3 Life Path is quite passionate. They truly need to be heard in a relationship, so you must be a good listener and really care about their inner emotional life. They can be somewhat dramatic. These folks can handle a crisis like a Pro. This person can be married to their projects rather than another person. They can also battle with depression. When not aligned with the constructive elements of their Life Path mission, they can be scattered, self-absorbed, and a procrastinator. Sometimes the 3 can hide from their emotions and be cut-off from that aspect of themselves. In this case, they will present as coldly analytical. Your primary purpose is to develop your sense of process, security, stability, and hard work in whatever you do. The 4 Life Path is a knowledge sponge and loves to share their knowledge with others. A hard worker and enjoys the satisfaction of a job well done. Excellent at organization and masters of systems. Inability to take risks and think outside the box. Can become a slave to the drudgery of work. Sees the world in a very literal way; can be a bossy know-it-all. Must learn to work with limitations. The 4 Life Path needs respect for taking care of you and their loved ones and pets! They need a partner who can encourage them - gently - to take risks in their lives. They can get lost in the drudgery of work. They can be bossy and become rigid in their thinking. They can become slaves to their routines to the detriment of their relationships. Your primary purpose is to develop your sense of fearlessness, adventure, and the constructive use of freedom in whatever you do. The 5 Life Path is resilient, an agent of change, vivacious, curious, and fun. The 5 Life Path is here to experience the world in the most tactile way possible. Drama Queen or King. Swings from independence to dependence and back again. Abandons things relationships or projects before giving it a proper chance or hanging on long past the shelf life is expired. The 5 Life Path needs freedom! The 5 is a highly attractive and energetic person. They need encouragement to complete one thing at a time before moving on to the next. They love eating great food, dancing - anything tactile. This person needs their space and freedom. Yet they can be fiercely loyal to a partner later in life, as long as they can continue to have their independence and freedom. The 5 can be scattered and also sway between total dependence on you and total independence from you. Addictions can sometimes come into play, because the 5 is the master of escape. Be prepared for lots of emotional high-intensity. On the flip-side, the 5 can opt into feeling fearful rather than fearless and can hyperventilate at the thought of packing their suitcase. Your primary purpose is to develop your sense of nurturing, balanced responsibility, acceptance, and vision in whatever you do. Is an idealist, visionary can see The Big Picture , and is magnetic. Has a compassionate heart, is a natural counselor and supportive nurturer. Demands impossibly high standards from themselves and from others. The 6 Life Path is the ultimate nurturer and is highly responsible. If you want a marriage partner who would be a ready, willing, and able parent - this is usually the one. The 6 is all about home and family. This person needs to be in control, so know that about them. So always use praise and constructive criticism with a 6 Life Path. This person can idealize their partner at first and then become disappointed when reality sets in. They can be a perfectionist and self-righteous. They can become a martyr if they gravitate toward the destructive tendencies of the 6. On the darker side, they can be super-critical of their loved ones and quite difficult to live with because of that issue. They can become over-controllers, enablers, and meddlers rather than allowing everyone carry their own responsibility. Your primary purpose is to develop your sense of spirituality, data-driven analysis, intuition, trust, and openness in whatever you do. The 7 Life Path has a highly refined mind, is compassionate, and is always asking the bigger questions about life. Needs isolated time alone to process and unplug. Is mysterious, intriguing, and complex. The 7 Life Path works with trust issues. The 7 Life Path is always seeking The Truth " about the world, about themselves, about everything. The 7 needs isolated time alone. This person is intuitive and also highly analytical. They have issues with trust and are working on being vulnerable and open. Your primary purpose is to develop your positive relationship with money, power, control, authority, and generosity in whatever you do. The 8 Life Path is here to experience the satisfaction that comes with financial abundance and achievement.

Chapter 3 : Inspiring, Famous & Great Quotes About Destiny

Destiny. One of the most romantic notions we can possibly attach to the concept of love, that you will meet someone and right away you will both know that it was just "meant to be".

George Clooney has a 4 Destiny Number. You want to be the best at everything you do. You expect very high standards of performance from yourself and, in turn, also expect the same from others, which can set you up for frustration and disappointment. Your purpose is to take the lead and take initiative—the 1 Destiny number is not lack-luster or low-key! All this while communicating and acting with clarity and compassion. A 1 Destiny number sets you up for a lifetime of development of your sense of self banish that sense of self-doubt, your willpower, and setting out with determination without allowing the naysayers or glitches along the road weigh you down or demolish your vision. You work hard and play hard. You need to have an exercise routine that helps you burn off excess stress. You need to demonstrate your originality and leadership and also teach it to others. The 1 Destiny number will demand that you develop yourself from a dependence to independence, individuation, and - ultimately - achievement and initiative. Destiny Number 2 Your destiny is to bring people together in an atmosphere of harmony and love. Your mission is to create harmony, balance, cooperation, and love wherever you go and in whatever you do. Love is the cornerstone to your life and finding that perfect mate is important to you. Your path includes developing diplomacy. Your destiny is to develop adaptability, open-hearted caring, and focus on the higher good. Understand that you need to get out and socialize, because when you isolate yourself, you suffer from pessimism, depression, and inaction. Destiny Number 3 Your destiny is to inspire, motivate, heal, and uplift people. Some of the qualities you bring to the table are beauty, possible eccentricity, excitement, and fame. You might find challenges in the areas of emotional ups and downs, depression, or being judgmental and critical. Destiny Number 4 Your destiny is to leave something of value that people can find beneficial in their day-to-day lives. In fact, honesty is a big issue for you. You have the potential to be a stellar marriage or business partner. Your life purpose revolves around being practical and hardworking. You might lean toward rigidity or stubbornness. You could avoid putting down roots, shy away from hard work, and avoid having a family of your own. Sometimes you can become so self-sacrificing that you become the martyr or a tyrant. This stems from your need to control and also from your high level of expectation about your own performance—and the performance of others. Even so, your 4 Destiny number puts you on the path of managing, organizing, and creating a foundation from which to build your life or enterprise. Destiny Number 5 Your destiny is to effect change and show people how to live life to the maximum. The freewheeling 5 Destiny number pushes you toward a mission of adaptability, progress, freedom, and embracing the adventure of life. Freedom is the guiding force in your life. You thrive on hands-on experience. Your purpose is to embrace your sense of fearlessness and follow your curiosity to explore the world and offer your magnetic presence and gifts to those around you. Most often the 5 Destiny number is intelligent, philosophical, and spiritually minded. Your destiny is one of liberation and freedom, no matter how you slice it. Your heightened self-centered emotionalism might also try your friendships and intimate relationships. Move forward, recalibrate yourself, and embrace positive change. Ultimately, your gift is showing others how to live fearlessly through your example. The key to your 5 Destiny is to work with boundaries and certain parameters or life could be chaotic and out of control. Your mission is to nurture and serve, plain and simple. Love shaken and stirred! You have a polished presentation about you and denote an air of authority in whatever you do. One of your specialties is damage control, so when things are moving along without trauma or drama, you have a tendency to either sweat it while you wait for the other shoe to drop, so to speak or you stir things up in order to have a problem to focus your energies on. Give yourself permission to accept things when life is good and smooth! No need to push it. You may find yourself in positions of responsibility early on in your life and that sense of responsibility will continue as you mature. You need to feel indispensable to others and yet resent the fact that others rely on you too much. Remember that your mission is to balance and modulate your sense of responsibility - not overly responsible meddling, self-righteous, perfectionist and not overly irresponsible self-centered, judgmental, controlling. While you may tend toward self-righteousness, codependency, or fall into being a martyr, your true calling is in healthy nurturing, compassionate detachment, acceptance of others get past that perfectionism! Destiny Number 7 Your destiny is to develop trust and faith and find your own answer to the meaning of life. As a 7 Destiny number, your mission is to seek out information and analyze it. You dig deep and contemplate heavily. Your life-long task is to get to know the true you, inside and out. Your life is instructed by a powerful collision between practical, tangible data and the analysis of it. The highest and best use of your extraordinary talents are cultivating knowledge, processing it into new ideas or practical usage, and applying your advanced wisdom to the data. Watch out for your sharp words, as you can hurt people without realizing it. Otherwise, you can fall into superficiality, skepticism, cynicism or depression. Destiny Number 8 Your destiny is to manifest financial security that allows you freedom to make a difference in the world. An 8 Destiny number is calling for you to gain self-mastery in a profound way. Your purpose is to achieve and succeed with business and organizationâ€”not to mention personal power, control, authority, and above all, ethics. The Eight is a relentless taskmaster and demands that you understand and employ all your abilities to achieve financial abundance and also to give to others generously. Right out of the gate, you have authority issues. Watch out for becoming an opinionated control-freak. Steer clear of greed, ruthlessness, or being overly opinionated and over-bearing. Instead, focus on wealth and abundance. Remember that as you give, you receive. Oddly enough, you can be extremely sentimental and emotional. Remember that you have amazing potential for improving the lives of a lot of people. You can be easily misinterpreted because of your gruff, direct, and opinionated manner. Your word of caution: Your flip-side is that you find yourself in the opposite situation. Money and power are a consistent theme in your life one way or the other. It demands that you dig into your power and move through obstacles - and there will be many obstacles. Destiny Number 9 Your destiny is to achieve a higher state of consciousness and teach others how to achieve theirs. Your mission is a humanitarian one. This Destiny number is a powerful one demanding that you learn to transform and heal both yourself and others while letting go of the past freely and without bitterness. You may find yourself tripping over into the arena of resentment, of intolerance, or gullibility. You may have to deal with enmeshment with your family of origin throughout your life. Your task is to let go of family issues fully and completely. You often feel either resentment toward the family or feel overly responsible for them. You need to be aware that people respond much more favorably to you when you connect with them through being a compassionate active listener rather than a preacher, lecturer, or proselytizer. Understand that you can have an intimidating quality to you, despite your big heart. Often the 9 Destiny number can come off as arrogant or unapproachable. Realize that everyone thinks you have it all or have it all together and so you find it difficult to ask for help or support. Your special mission is to recognize and use your creativity, intuition, and healing abilities for the benefit of humanity as a whole. You can achieve this in a multitude of waysâ€”eliciting an emotional response through dance, music, or art. Working one-on-one or in groups with various healing modalities. Or you can write, entertain, teach. Remember, you are a double 1 leadership, confidence and yet also a 2 harmony, love. So you come with some special challenges to fulfill your mission. A 2 Life Path will go out of their way to avoid being in the spotlight. The 11 pushes you into the spotlight and this will have some disconcerting effects on you. This number sets you up for inspired leadership and achievement. Your mission as a Master number is to execute and build projects that will benefit a wide arena of humankind. You might be challenged with not feeling up to the task or even entitled to do something that might take you into fame and fortune. You might even cringe at the idea of making a lot of money given the energy of the 4 is more about feeling a sense of security, not necessarily manifesting abundance. It sounds like a small detail, yet mentally this can drag you down. Avoid your stubborn streak and a tendency to be a know-it-all. Gather your supporters around you, set up the systems to make it work, and hand over some of the responsibilities to others.

Life Love Destiny. K likes. A life story, a journey of a lifetime, A story where there is a little of each of us in every one of them!

A commentary on past life regression, hypnosis, meditation, and the profound spiritual connotations of the information gleaned from these experiences Sunday, November 28, Love and Destiny Destiny. One of the most romantic notions we can possibly attach to the concept of love, that you will meet someone and right away you will both know that it was just "meant to be". But, is this true? Are we "destined" to meet our soul mate? How does destiny work when it comes to love? In order to do that, I need to establish here that destiny is a concept that relies on a belief that there is some kind of natural order to the cosmos. It can be as simple as believing that the sun will rise in the morning and that the seasons will change because there is a greater design, energy, or power greater than us that causes these things to happen. So, if you can make that leap, and embrace that possibility, then you can also believe in destiny. Destiny is how this natural order I described above impacts our lives directly, or rather how we experience it. If we thought about it, we could sit every morning in the pre-dawn light in awe as the sun emerged and wonder in amazement at how it must have been destined to appear in the sky. Most of us take it for granted that certain things will happen, and therefore we only decide to call it destiny when something occurs that we were not expecting. We also tend to confuse the terms destiny and fate, thinking that they are identical and interchangeable. Although they are related, they are different in that fate is something that is fixed and unchangeable. Fate is something that absolutely happens, so we can only look back at something that happened in the past and call it fate. This is because nothing in the future is absolute, only the past can be a sure thing. Destiny is how we describe something that can and probably will happen in the future, but yet it allows for choices to be made. So, quite simply, fate happens. But, destiny is something that we actively participate in. We choose our destiny. So, how does this relate to soul mates? Do we get to choose our destined love? How do we participate in meeting them, especially when we only call it destiny if it is something that we were not expecting? Well, we have many soul mates of different types. And, our meeting all of them is and was destiny. Some we meet because we have karma to work out, and others we meet in order to learn lessons about giving and receiving love. And, each and every one of these soul mates was our destiny, meaning that we made choices that led to our meeting. The idea of the soul mate has shown up in nearly every culture on the globe throughout history, and it has also consistently been linked to the concept of destiny. In East Asia, there is a legend called the "red thread of destiny" in which a mystical red string is tied to the fingertips of two meant to be lovers that connects them. And, although the string can twist, turn, and bend, this tie to one another will ultimately ensure their destined meeting. In Ancient Greek mythology, there are three women called "Fates", or Moirae who were weavers that spun intricate webs of intertwining threads that represented different life paths of human beings. When these threads overlapped one another, they represented two lives intersecting, or a destined meeting. Anyone who has ever been in a relationship can relate to this imagery, that for a time your threads were intertwined and your paths on the same trajectory, and upon separating your threads continue on, but in different directions. This thread idea also shows up in Norse and Roman mythology, in Navajo legend, and in some Pacific and African traditions as well. It is also the word for soul mate, or the "beloved". This term actually marries the two concepts together, making them one and the same. Because destiny implies an order to the universe, and allows us to make choices, our path through life and lifetimes consists of what the universe throws our way and the subsequent choices that we make. Now, keep in mind that the path I am referring to is your path. We do not find our destiny by searching for it; we discover it on our journey through life. We meet our destined love by doing what we love doing and going to the places that we enjoy going to. Although you can meet someone nice by hanging out at the golf course because you would love to date an avid golfer, if you are not a golf lover yourself, they will not be your destined love. This is because the journey to our beloved, or our destiny, is actually a journey inward. We meet our destined love by being ourselves and doing what we do anyway. I have seen this at work in my own life. The last relationship I was in, the only thing I had to do to meet him was to get up and go to work that day. And, this phenomenon is incredibly far reaching, as the universe will conspire to bring two people together despite any obstacles. My ex-husband was born completely on the other side of the world from where I was, yet by following my own life path, and he his, we managed to make it to our destined meeting. Which leads me to my next point; destined loves are not always destined to last. Even if a relationship does not work out, it does not change the fact that it was destined for both of you to meet. When we encounter a soul mate, or someone with whom we have a connection, they come along in order to represent a choice. Soul mates appear in our lives to open up new doors, new possibilities for our future, and show us that there is a fork in the road. We are destined to meet, but how we deal with it is entirely our choice. Do we allow ourselves to be open to love? Or, do we ignore it and let the opportunity to be in a relationship with them pass us by? Once in the relationship, does our fear create power and control issues? Are we cruel to them, and cheat and lie? Or, do we choose to allow ourselves to be vulnerable and let them into our lives and our hearts, thereby discovering the beauty of love? We make pacts and agreements with one another before we are born, or soul contracts, that our paths will cross in order to present this intersection to one another in order to help each other grow and develop spiritually. So, in this way, each of our destined loves have played a role in propelling us forward in some way on our spiritual paths. This idea might be difficult for some to swallow, because I am suggesting that the abusive and even violent relationships are based on soul contracts as well and came into our lives to teach us and present us with an opportunity for growth. Remember, it comes with a choice, and anyone who has ever empowered themselves enough to leave such a relationship can tell you that the choice to do so was not a step, but rather a giant leap in their spiritual evolution. This is also why it is important to allow yourself time to heal between relationships, and not jump into a new one right away. By spending some time reviewing the issues that came up in you, and being truly honest with yourself about why it failed, you can honor this soul contract process and really do some work on yourself. Although they might look different, you could end up dating the same person over and over again because you have not spent the time to reflect and properly heal. During my own meditation practice, I have found it quite useful when I need to reflect on my previous relationships, to conjure up an image in my mind of a past love who has hurt me in some way, or were somehow incapable of giving and showing love properly. If you try this exercise, look at them, in their eyes if it is not too difficult, but you have to be careful not to connect too much energetically to an abuser or someone that you have already worked hard to distance yourself from, and ask them to return to you the pieces of yourself that were lost as a result of the pain you suffered from that failed relationship. Holding out your hands, take these parts of yourself back they can be literal objects, or symbolic and return them to you by placing them into your heart chakra, which is located at the center of your chest. But, if you do this exercise, be prepared to do the reverse exchange as well, and give them back the pieces of themselves that they have lost at your hands. Doing exercises such as this help to set a powerful intent to heal the relationship, and to more objectively understand it and the role it played in your life and your spiritual development, and then to move on from it. When you take the time to do this type of inner work, and spend time contemplating and becoming more self-aware of your issues surrounding relationships, you will heal and subsequently begin to vibrate energetically at a higher level. And, because a destined soul mate is someone whose level of vibration matches your own, you will eventually attract a new destined love of a higher caliber. By climbing the ladder of your own spiritual growth and development, you will meet someone who has done the same, and enter into a relationship that vibrates at a higher rate as well. Yes, it is true that the higher you climb, the fewer potential partners you will find, but they are out there. The more we heal and learn about ourselves through the work of being in a relationship with another person, the better quality relationship we will be capable of. And remember, your destined love is also doing this inner work and is hoping that their destined path will lead them to you. What we need to remember here is to keep the focus on ourselves, as the journey to your beloved, or your destined love, is ultimately a journey to yourself. This does not mean that we should be selfish, which is the act of taking power away from others for our own gain, because being selfish will not ever lead to a spiritually evolved relationship. What I mean is that you should keep your focus directed inward, and therefore create your own power within yourself. When you can do that, you will have a real magnetism that will attract all of the right people and circumstances into your life. You create your own destiny by following your own path, and your destined soul mate lies along that path. These splintered pieces would be doomed to spend many lifetimes searching for one another, longing to be whole again. According to this story, the reason that Zeus did this was because he was afraid of our power. And, hereby is the key to the idea of destined love. When we are with another in a true partnership, we are not twice as strong, but exponentially so. But, we first have to cultivate ourselves so that a true partnership can exist. A relationship based on need, control, insecurities, dishonesty, and fear cannot be such a partnership. What we are looking for is not our match, but rather our compliment. Like a spoon in a drawer, putting two spoons together implies that one alone is not sufficient, that it needs a "match". In order to find our compliment, we first have to learn how to be "enough" on our own. Looking for someone to "complete you" gives your potential mate way too much power, and so you will attract a partner who will exploit and abuse that power. When you are a whole person on your own, then you will attract someone else who is as well, and your relationship will be missing the drama and pain of your previous ones. We take the time and effort to be incarnated in human form so that we can learn, and life is truly a school filled with lessons of various types. But, the most important lesson we are confronted with during our experiences over many lifetimes involves love. Quite simply, relationships with others is why we are here. And, our relationships reflect our current level of healing; we can see where we are at by examining the quality of the relationship we are in. And, if you are not currently in a relationship, then it is important to examine that as well. Are you still healing from the last one? Do you still feel anger, bitterness, and resentment toward any of your previous partners? Or, are you being confronted with the lesson of being patient and waiting for the right person to cross paths with you? Taking note of this, and becoming aware of where you are at regarding relationship issues is a vital step toward uncovering your destiny.

Chapter 5 : Life and Fate - Wikipedia

*Life, Love and Destiny [Barbara Dunn, Archie Dunlop] on theinнатdunvilla.com FREE shipping on qualifying offers. An easy-to-understand guide on how to draw up a personal horoscope.*

Love Advice No matter what you were told or what you may believe about your individual choices, your life has an underlying meaningful plan. We call this plan "destiny". Although there are some strong voices clearly against the notion that a predetermined destiny exists, a destiny is inscribed in the heart and eternal soul of man. Soulmates have a mutual destiny. It is your divine destiny to unite with your soulmate and fulfill your lives through a bond of love and friendship. Your meeting is the first of many miracles on your journey together and begins the storyline of a chapter you planned for the evolution of your relationship. With your soulmate before you, you are asked to shed the fears and masks that deny you love and to step beside the person who can love you. Your path is no longer a solitary one without companionship and support but rather a path of unity and synergistic experiences that can offer you fulfillment time and time again. Your destiny together may pose some limitations. Although you and your soulmate can both forge ahead with plans of your own devised to afford you comfort and success, your souls are nudging you forward on their own unique evolutionary plan for spiritual achievement. This plan may support the dreams you have for your life together or it may contradict it, giving you instead exactly what we need to grow in consciousness, not necessarily what we want materially. Fate is a universal law and cosmic principle that offers us our just due, what we deserve as opposed to what we think we deserve. The Greeks have a beautiful name for fate, Moira, the cosmic principle of binding apportionment. Moira selects and distributes our "due portion" in life, whether it is in the form of financial opportunities or opportunities for loving friendships. Fate grants us our due in reaction to our previous acts of free will. The reaction can be immediate or it can follow us for many lifetimes. What goes around eventually comes around. Therefore, even if you consistently choose love over hatred and live an exceptional life, you are not guaranteed a blissful life with everything you want. You may instead experience years of limitation and hardships that may make you wonder, "Why us? Destiny unfolds creatively through the years, putting in front of you the tasks your souls decided to accomplish for this life. Whether it is to start a family and serve other souls close to you or to collaborate to serve humanity through some mission, the opportunities will arrive to put your talents to work. You may never achieve the full potentials of your destiny, but with each milestone you meet, your lives grow richer. Your destiny is manifested through your mutual intention and willingness to step boldly onto its path. It offers many opportunities for growth and some freedom to create with the synergy you share. When love is at the center of everything you do, the synergy will be magnified with the power you need to manifest your dreams together. Here are three keys to help you better manifest your destiny together: Embrace and appreciate your life lessons and any limitations that may come. View them as opportunities to grow your relationship to a higher volume of love. View your personal goals as mutual ones. Create goals that support your mutual desires and put love into them. Get on the same page and stay there. And remember that everything you achieve personally is meant to be shared mutually. Remember that loving each other is your highest purpose. Your love will help you weather the storms as well as propel your dreams for the future. Your ultimate destiny is to live a fulfilling life together.

Chapter 6 : Destiny Sayings and Destiny Quotes | Wise Old Sayings

He bounded into university life in with what seemed like effortless optimism, vitality and energy. He was exposed to whole new realms of thoughts and ideas.

I know that I had been here before, many years ago, in my dreams. I was one of those people who had vivid dreams and there were many times in my life when I had the same dream a few times, or had been to the same place in my dreams with different scenarios. I also knew that I had a hyperactive imagination, but sometimes, some things are better left unexplained. After Zoheb had passed away, I had often visited this place in my dreams. I had often sat with him on this soft green grass, often rested my head on his strong shoulders, and I spoke to him for what seemed like hours on end. I accredited this to my longing for him, I would replay different scenarios with him in my head, relive memories and pretend that everything was okay during the day. So naturally, my mind would contort the events of the day into a dream at night. That would be the logical explanation. And that was fine with me. It meant that I had something to hold onto and when night would pass without a dream, the next day would be miserable. I would pray earnestly to travel to those daffodil filled meadows again, to speak to him again, to be with him again. But the mind is a strange thing, I would sometimes end up dreaming of the darndest things! But it would happen, suddenly, out of the blue, once every few days, sometimes weeks, sometimes months and it would fill me with so much of happiness. The last time was a few days before Nemo and I got married, and then it was such a strange dream. He was standing with a bunch of yellow daffodils in his hand and a bunch of pink roses. And when I had reached out for the daffodils, he handed me the roses instead, with the biggest, most endearing dimpled smile on his face. I walked on, barefoot, my long green dress sweeping up tiny speckles of glitter from the ground. Tall trees lined a massive meadow of yellow daffodils that seemed to sparkle under the sunlight. The sound of gentle laughter could be heard in the wind, drawing me towards it towards the source of it. And in his other hand, he carried a baby who seemed to be a few months old, dressed identically to Hana, and she giggled gleefully with every twirl and swish! And as he moved, glitter rose from the ground in small soft circles around them. The sight itself was beyond enchanting. Zoheb smiled at the children and blew them kisses in the air and it seemed as though they were oblivious to me standing right there watching them until he lifted his eyes and smiled at me.. It took a few seconds for me to register my surroundings as I tried to sit up. That was a dream. A very vivid dream. Zoheb and Hana Who was the baby? I peeped over into the crib right next to me and stared at my four day old daughter, my heart swelling with love with every passing second. She was so adorably perfect and so perfectly fast asleep. My mother was going to have a fit! She would insist that I just go from pyjama to pyjama after every bath and I got it, I mean, I did give birth a few days ago but being permanently in pyjamas made me feel unnecessarily sleepy and cranky, so this change was quite welcoming. The truth be told, the only time that I was alone with Nemo since the baby was born was when I was fast asleep and he sat at my bedside! It was a weird feeling, but a good kind of weird. He reciprocated with an endearing smile and pulled me in for a hug, careful not to squish and squash but just enough for me to feel his heart thudding against his chest. I knew what this was.. A page that was necessary and one that I can never and will never rip out. I rubbed my nose against his and kissed his lips softly. I was truly so lucky, so blessed, so at peace. Nemo and I had evolved in our marriage and relationship, and life was never quite the same again- it just got better and better. Some things are best left unknown, and some things just cannot be explained, for He knows, and He sees and He is the greatest of planners, the Giver of Life, the Creator of Love, the Master of Destiny- Allah the most High, Most Merciful. From what we were to what we became, is proof that there surely is hope, there surely is a chance. Never give up, ever, because that turning point could be right around the next corner.

Chapter 7 : Past Life Spiritual Practice: Love and Destiny

The good life doesn't mean a life free of problems, conflict, setbacks and drama. The good life doesn't mean that every day is perfect and you have somehow transcended over all negativity. I believe, the good life, is simply when you are able to recognize all the good in your life - where ever and whenever that is.

It is something that expresses who we are and what we are. Doing through Being 2: It is something we enjoy. Something we have passion for, something that captures our soul 3: It is our vision. Something we believe we can create in this world, something we imagine to be possible 4: It is something we can accept as our lifestyle. Integrates with everything else we do and the way we live our lives. It is something we believe in. Part of your reason for coming to earth is to evolve yourself and part of it is to serve humanity in some way. They are intertwined because as you evolve, you serve others in a much better way, and the process of serving others can also result in your evolution. Money will be a by-product of doing what you love and will flow effortlessly into your life, without even much thought. Now is the time to listen to your inner messages and discover the special work you came to do. Begin to put that work out to the world, for it is very much needed. Your calling is what ties your life together, and gives you a sense of connectedness with your past. It is something you feel not in your brain but in your gut. It is something you find meaningful to you. Everyone has this kind of purpose or calling in life. And everyone has also been generously endowed with the talent necessary to fulfill it. The value of a calling is on two levels. And second, it is the avenue through which one makes the greatest contribution to the world. But there is one characteristic of a calling that is particularly cherished by those of the Lazy Persuasion. A calling is, by marvelous happenstance, the easiest, most irresistible path to follow, the easiest path that produces the most results. Once you choose to stop denying what makes you happy, your life naturally evolves. All the signs are there, do not ignore the obvious. When you make a true decision to let yourself be directed by your natural enthusiasm, it gives you clarity. Go for what expresses you and completes you. It gives you a sense of connectedness to your past and ties your life together. You can get good at what you need to serve what you believe in. The true search is for what you believe in. The difference is whether your heart is in it. If you want a magical life, you have to drop your inauthentic transactions with the world. You discover your own power when you spend time alone to figure out what you really love to do. Life is nothing but a hollow sham without passion. The world needs you to be an enlightened giver of your dream. What do people really want? They want to find work they are passionate about. Productivity explodes when people love what they do. We are looking for work that gives us opportunities to give our true gifts. It is something we find ourselves drawn to, something we want to make happen. Something we believe as the ideal. Individuals that thrive will do so because they focused on the question of who they really are, and from that found work they truly love, and in so doing unleashed a creative power they never imagined. The vocation that you are in will result in the kind of subjects that will occupy your mind daily. Choose the vocation which resulting thoughts are what you would want to occupy your mind with. The things that you think about the most throughout the day really become what you are. You must focus on a specific target market that you love and want to work with for life. This makes it easy for you to stay motivated, it brings you more fulfillment in life, and it lets you make a very nice living in the process. Pick a group of people you can relate to. Picking a market you are suited to exploit first, then going after saleable products is a smart approach. Money is made so that you can use it to fulfill your vision. Doing something that makes you money as the sole reason without the purpose of creating something bigger is quite meaningless. The best way is to do something that makes you money as well as help you in fulfilling a big vision that you have at the same time. It is fine to have financial goals as long as we understand that we use those finances to help us live the life we deserve while at the same times allowing us to fulfill our mission. By expressing our talents and gifts and by sharing them with the rest of the world. And when you allow yourself to follow the flow of those inspired ideas, your potential for a joyous experience is much greater than if you were to select your career based on other reasons that people use to justify their choices, such as family tradition or income potential. In other words, without a real perception of freedom you will never be joyful. We encourage you to decide as early in life as possible that your dominant intent and reason for existence is to live happily ever after. That would be a very good career choice to gravitate toward those activities and to embrace those desires that harmonize with your core intentions, which are freedom and growth and joy. Make a career of living a happy life rather than trying to find work that will produce enough money that you can do things with your money that will then make you happy. You are naturally productive where your passion lies. But first you have to find your passion, that is the key. Many people are passionate, but because of their limiting beliefs about who they are and what they can do, they never take the actions that could make their dream a reality. A story we read or someone we briefly met. A meek voice inside, whispering. The rewards of pursuing it are only for those who are willing to listen attentively, only for those people who really care. Business is a tool to support what you believe in. Our calling is a vehicle to let our real selves out. Work is an expression of life. It is certain that you can do what you want to do. The desire to do it is proof that you have within you the power which can do it. Desire is power seeking to manifest. Every desire is possibility seeking expression through life. The desire to play music is the power which can play music seeking expression and development. The desire to speak before millions is the power which can inspire the world seeking expression and development. The key is development. When there is no power, either developed or undeveloped to do a thing, there is never any desire to do that thing. When there is strong desire to do a thing, it is certain proof that the power to do it is strong. The more unbreakable a desire is, the more unbreakable the power present is. Within your passion is genius. Power comes from purpose. It is God that works in us both to will and to do. Being abundant is your birthright. It is a lot easier to succeed than it is to fail, you have to work hard to fail, whereas to succeed you only have to let go. If you knew how much energy you invest in creating failure you would drop it in an instant. When you resist abundance, you are going against your natural state. For example, resisting a desire to become an artist or make that phone call, or follow a childhood dream are all ways in which we resist. We are literally cutting off our energy flow. Being untrue to ourselves makes us unfulfilled. You can learn to follow through on those activities that you love and give you a feeling of being open and energized. Just remember doing what you love will open up your energy, and opening up your energy will allow abundance to come into your life. Most people spend the majority of their life trying to figure out what is it they came here to do. And the majority of them come to that realization at the end of their lives. Because right before they are about to make their transition, they realize that the work they came here to do had nothing to do with figuring things out. It had to do with doing the things that brings them joy. So the work we came here to do has nothing to do with figuring anything out. It is something that arises naturally as a result of doing the things that brings us joy. When we do so, something magical takes place. We find ourselves in careers we never even thought of being a part of. Joy is your inner guide.

Chapter 8 : Destiny Quotes (quotes)

You are the master of your own destiny. Use your strengths well. They are the keys to your destiny and your success in life. Once you know yourself and take action to realize your dreams, you can unlock the doors to your own potential.

Chlark4ever92 Story starts at the end of Vessel. This story shows the process of Clark realizing and accepting his destiny. Will eventually be Chlark. I live for reviews! This is chapter one of my story Life, Love, And Destiny. This basically is a prologue to the story. It sums up what happened at the end of Vessel, which is where my story begins. I know this is short, but the following chapters will be longer. I pretty much live off reviews so please tell me what you think, but no flames please. Life, Love, And Destiny Author: Will change as the story progresses. Nothing major, except for Vessel. Smallville belongs to the WB which is soon to be the CW. Disclaimer goes for all chapters of the story. Along the way he learns a lot about himself, and how the people in his life are connected with his destiny. He realizes who will always be there for him, and who his real enemies are. Clark turned his attention from where Fine had been standing only moments before, to Lex, as he heard him screaming. A light, brighter than the previous if possible, surrounded Lex, and then as quickly as it came, it disappeared, but unlike Fine, Lex remained when the light vanished. Clark stopped in front of Lex. He looked different somehow. There was something about the look in his eyes. But before Clark had time to figure out what that was, Lex walked up a step, and turned back to Clark, looking down on him. Zod had taken over a human vessel. Your father banished me to an eternal hell trying to save a doomed race. And in the end, the only survivor of his pathetic crusade was his son. And now everyone on Earth would have to pay. He had to stop this. These people did nothing to harm you" Clark pleaded desperately. But you feel no pain greater than to see others in agony. He had to do something. Unless you join me. Clark looked at the object, and instantly recognized it. It was a metallic bracelet with Kryptonian symbols etched onto it. Zod lifted the bracelet up, and it flew from his hand, past Clark, and through the open barn window. Clark looked at Zod, who was smirking at him, looking very pleased. Clark felt an odd, yet familiar sensation overcome him. He had felt the same sensation less than a year ago, when the two Kryptonians that had come down during the last meteor shower, had tried to send him to the Phantom Zone. Suddenly he was air born, and he felt a sense of dread overcome him. Not just himself, but everyone on Earth. He had always been able to save the day somehow. Stop all the chaos. But not this time. Please leave me a review. But of course the more, and the longer the reviews the better! Your review has been posted.

There is only one path to my destiny - Destiny is an energy of fulfillment, satisfaction, expression, love and commitment, and that energy can manifest itself a number of different ways. Also, destiny looks different at different places along the path.

Everyone, one day or another, sooner or later, asks questions like these: Who was I born to be? What is it I came here to do? What is my purpose on this planet? And let's face it; none of us wants to miss it. If there is a grand reason for our being here, it would be a major screw-up if we blithely danced through life without seeking the answer to this burning question: What is my destiny? When you think about it, the concept of destiny can be a bit confusing. Therefore nothing can really be called predetermined. Is our fate predestined? Your destiny can make you the happiest you can be. It is what you are best cut out for. It is what can give your life meaning, hope, joy and deep satisfaction. Not only that, but before you were born, you set yourself up for your destiny. You chose your parents, your country, your race, your sex, your gifts, your talents, your strengths and your challenges. Challenges are a part of my destiny? Sorry! Yeah, those challenges that you think are just negative crap things to move beyond are actually the proving ground that give you what you really need to succeed at your destiny. Learn the lesson and let it go. And what I did know I gave to my ego. Yeah, it was disappointing. But I did the only thing I could do forgive myself and let it go. I figured I would come back to teaching the law of attraction someday, but I placed happiness first in my life, and I let the universe handle the details the the universe is SO good at that. Let's look at a few common myths! Myths About Destiny 1. There is only one path to my destiny - Destiny is an energy of fulfillment, satisfaction, expression, love and commitment, and that energy can manifest itself a number of different ways. Also, destiny looks different at different places along the path. It will take some time to prepare for your destiny, to hone your skills and mature into it. But the truth was, those years were more valuable to my self-esteem than anything else could have been at the time. That experience gave me the confidence I needed plus I learned valuable information that I later used in my businesses. Once I figure destiny out all my problems will be over - Destiny is not a panacea. Destiny is destined to happen - Destiny is a choice. Destiny happens overnight - Destiny happens over a lifetime. It is an unfolding of who you really are. Destiny is a gift to be unwrapped over time. Okay, so how do I figure out my destiny? There is a surefire three-step process that will absolutely help you discover your destiny: Discovering Your Destiny in Three easy Steps: Accept the Easy Part First Your destiny can be divided into two parts: Your Personal Destiny You see every human being comes to this planet for one specific reason above and beyond anything else it is what we were born to do. So that is your number one, first and foremost priority. Wait a minute that seems selfish. What about the starving children? You cannot help them until you help yourself. Your empowerment must begin with your own life. So step one is to get cracking on a glorious wonderful dream and then learn how to consciously create that dream. It is what you are best suited for, what you have the ability to be absolute genius at, and what will bring you more joy and money, should you allow it than anything else on the planet. And the way to uncover your destiny is by doing what excites you every minute you possibly can. Then start where you are. Accept your life sucks. Now, of all the sucky things you could do right now, what is most exciting? Give yourself the time and space to mentally list them. Well, I could walk the dog, do the dishes, clean the toilets, watch TV, check my Facebook page, get a snack, or call my friend! Good! Now try those things on imagine them, one at a time. Which one is more exciting than the others? Loving yourself by prioritizing an enjoyable life b. Drawing more exciting things to you by focusing on the exciting things c. Giving yourself the freedom to allow your interests, talents and strengths to come to the surface OK, but what does this have to do with my destiny? And the more you do that, the more you will be utilizing your talents, strengths and unique gifts to the very best of your ability, the more you will be loving life, the more you will be following your excitement every minute, and the more you will be creating a dream come true. No matter what it looks like on the outside, your greatest ability is to be who you really are with joy, love and success. And the cool part about that is, there is no greater gift you could give anyone around you! You will be gifting your presence, your example, and your light to everything and everyone on this planet. But there is one more thing you will need to do to pull this off! 3. So ask yourself another question: When you read about discovering your destiny, what comes up for you? Here are some common responses: What beliefs might these responses point to? And you would change them to these beliefs: Something Else You Should Know Because your destiny is so connected to your spirituality, your destiny has the support of your Soul and higher self, and even God and Goddess. Then go for it! "make your Soul happy" start following your path of destiny today! In joyous creation, P. You can learn exactly how to manifest your destiny in The Map. Here is what one Amazon reviewer had to say about the book: She Boni Lonnsburry really has a grasp of things that have helped me trust in the principles much more deeply!