He was personal witness to a string of unsuccessful marriages in his family, from that of his grandparents to those of his own parents, his sisters and many of his Habsburg cousins. Both rulers were deposed in course of unification of Italy and kept claiming the titles when living on exile. Zita Bourbon-Parme in was the empress of Austria and the queen of Hungary , while Felix Bourbon-Parme in was the duke-consort of Luxembourg. A few of his Habsburg-Lothringen cousins were in succession titular claimants to the defunct Grand Duchy of Tuscany, while a few of his Bourbon-Parme cousins were in succession titular claimants to the defunct Duchy of Parma. Some cousins married into royal houses of Italy, [15] Denmark [16] and Saxony. The only successful marriage was concluded by his older sister Blanca ; in she married archduke Leopold Salvator of Austria, descendant to a cadet branch of the exiled Tuscan Habsburgs. They had many children and though on exile " after also from the republican Austria " the couple led a fairly happy family life. The younger sister Elvira was about to marry archduke Leopold Ferdinand Habsburg , son of the deposed Grand Duke of Tuscany , but due to political reasons the plan was blocked by Emperor Franz Joseph I ; [21] in she fled with an Italian painter Filippo Folchi. Her father announced the daughter "had died for all of us" [22] and the runaway couple with their children shuttled across Europe. Elvira tried to sue her father over inheritance; later she and Folchi parted. Though with 4 children they were not a happy couple, with constant arguments and her suicide attempt; [25] later the couple kept up appearances but they eventually separated. Just after giving birth to their only son she abandoned her husband, got the marriage annulled by the Church and in married an Italian officer Lino del Prete. Though when later serving in the Russian army in Warsaw Don Jaime had women in his mind [34] there is no confirmation of any amorous episodes until he was already in his late 30s and subject to concern about lack of Carlist dynastic succession. He was attracted to a year-old Bourbon-Parme cousin Marie-Antoinette , [35] but apparently realised impracticability of the would-be relationship. Don Jaime soon started to pursue [36] her slightly older sister Zita ; [37] though some claim that the two were about to get married [38] the girl has never watched her cousin favorably. About to turn 50 Don Jaime mounted matrimonial plans focused on Fabiola Massimo , his year-old niece; [43] he already approached the Vatican about a dispensation. The permission has reportedly been denied, either due to protests of his brother-in-law or intrigues of the Madrid court. Since turning 10 the boy lived away from the family boarded in various educational institutions, meeting his parents and sisters during short holiday spells; the exception were the years of , spent mostly with his mother and siblings in Viareggio. Don Jaime was growing up in rather cosmopolitan ambience, exposed to French, Spanish, German, English and Italian cultures; as a teenager he was already fluent in all these languages. At that time Carlos VII was in Spain leading his troops during the Third Carlist War ; in the boy with his mother visited his father on the Carlist-held territory and dressed in uniform, was cheered with frenetic enthusiasm by Carlist soldiers. Initially the boy followed a challenging semi-board pattern; waking up as early as 4: As perhaps the most prestigious student [66] he received special treatment. Still considered childish by his mother, he was accompanied by a family trustee, Miguel Ortigosa. According to his later opponents in the academy [82] Don Jaime became loose on his Catholic practices and got somewhat derailed from Traditionalist track. Don Jaime was neither promoted to officer rank nor admitted to the imperial army. He gave rise to a number of rather friendly anecdotes, [89] while his journey was widely discussed in the press. Petersburg court and some time late it was agreed that Don Jaime would join the Russian army. In late he received a transfer order to Warsaw , where he arrived in late March or early April He spent there almost 6 years on the highly intermittent basis, until he departed for Austria in late Vistula Land In the late 19th century, Warsaw was the third most populous city of the Russian Empire ; with almost , inhabitants, it was larger than Madrid or Barcelona. At that time Warsaw was the centre of Vistula Land , a region that retained some minor legal identity but, in general, was well integrated into the Russian administrative structures. The city was headquarters of the westernmost of 14 Russian military districts, and home to a large military garrison. Itself a prominent salient flanked by German and Austro-Hungarian provinces, it posed a challenge for planners. The prevailing military strategy, known as Miliutin-Obruchev system, pursued a defensive counteroffensive vision; [] it admitted that initially it might be necessary to abandon territories west of the Vistula and mount a defense based on seven fortresses, of which Warsaw and the other three would form a forward shield. He also spent brief rest periods in the Polish countryside. As at that time he was already released from the hussar regiment, it is likely he intended to terminate his Warsaw service. During outbreak of the war against Japan in early Don Jaime was with his father in Venice , where he was reached by the call to arms; before having been received by Nicholas II in St. Petersburg in March he was likely to have stayed few days in Warsaw, though this was not recorded by the local press. It is also possibleâ€”though not confirmed in sourcesâ€”that he spent few days in Warsaw in June en route from Austria to St. Despite his modest rank don Jaime took part in official feasts seated among most prestigious participants, be it members of the House of Romanov , top Russian generals like military district commander or civil officials like president of Warsaw. Politics[edit] Russian cavalry in Warsaw, The Warsaw press of the era was fairly well informed about developments in Spain, with war against the United States systematically reported and even results of the Cortes elections discussed down to minuscule details; e. At one opportunity the prince made some effort to court the Poles, referring to alleged Polish combatants in ranks of the legitimist troops during the last Carlist war; [] official Spanish diplomatic services tried to keep a close watch on him. It is not clear whether vague personal references to the Russian revolution, made by don Jaime in his 23 April manifesto, were anyhow related to the events. Jaime retired from the Russian army and henceforward lived mostly at Schloss Frohsdorf in Lanzenkirchen in Austria and at his apartment on Avenue Hoche in Paris. He visited Spain incognito on a number of occasions. On 16 April , by a decree to his Delegate-General in Spain, the Marques de Villores , Jaime created the Order of Prohibited Legitimacy Orden de la Legitimidad Proscrita to honour those who suffered imprisonment in Spain or were exiled for their loyalty to the Carlist cause. Jaime issued a manifesto calling upon all monarchists to rally to the legitimist[clarification needed] cause. These meetings marked a certain rapprochement between the two claimants to the Spanish throne. According to some authors - contested by the others - the two signed or verbally agreed an arrangement which would terminate the Alfonsist-Carlist discord. A week after his meetings with Alfonso, Jaime died in Paris. He was buried at the Villa dei Borbone at Tenuta Reale.
