Most have only recently been designated state symbols, although the state seal was first used in SC Amphibian – Spotted Salamander Named the official state amphibian in , following a year-long campaign by the third-grade class of Woodland Heights Elementary School in Spartanburg. They are plentiful in our state, and in the legislature named them the official state animal. These farms, located mainly in the Midlands and Upstate, raise goats and cows for milk production. Interestingly, our state bird was the Mockingbird from until Butterflies are most prevalent in South Carolina during the autumn. Boykin had longed for a better dog to hunt water fowl with. Dumpy became the father of the Boykin Spaniel. These ducks like marshy areas and can commonly be found in wooded parts of rivers, ponds, swamps, and shallow lakes. Traditionally favoring coastal rivers for their flowing water, the striped bass has adapted over the years and now thrives in lakes across the state too. Because it is native to our state, it is also called Carolina jessamine. Jessamine is an evergreen vine that climbs trees, fences, and latticework. It blooms in late winter or early spring. The medium of craft and art styles is vast, spanning from the traditional to modern. Eventually, French quadrilles, Irish jigs, and English reels were interwoven and the square dance was born. The color of grits depends on the color of corn used – yellow or white. In , fossilized mammoth teeth were discovered in a SC swamp. Then, in the s, their popularity blossomed as cotton farmers stymied by the boll weevil looked for new crops. South Carolina now leads all southern states in peach production – including Georgia! Its adaptivity has lead to the Indian Grass to be declared a weed in some areas of the country. This designation followed the discovery of several world-class amethysts at the Ellis-Jones Mine near Due West. Samples of these amethysts are on display at the Smithsonian Museum of Natural History. They also serve to remind us of the rich African heritage brought to this country by slaves. Once thought extinct, DNA testing in proved the breed was still alive in coastal South Carolina. With eggs hatching in the spring, the insects are mature by the end of summer and are most commonly seen from then through early fall. In SC, these mammals can be seen offshore as well as in bays and estuaries. At a population estimated at just , the Right Whale Sighting Advisory System has been developed to reduce collisions with ships. If you spot a whale, please report it here. Both were first used in when the state seal had two sides. Originating in the slave era, these songs have strong religious foundations and roots that stretch to African ancestors. Famed composer George Gershwin immediately contacted Heyward after reading it to form a collaboration to develop a folk opera based on the book. Carson in , "I salute the flag of South Carolina and pledge to the Palmetto State love, loyalty and faith. SC Popular Music, Beach Music SC Reptile – Loggerhead Turtle Named for their large, log-shaped heads, loggerhead turtles are the most common species of saltwater turtle in the United States but have been on the threatened species list since the late s. Nests are made on beaches during mid-to-late summer. The two sides were combined into one when it proved difficult to include impressions of both in wax for documents. The seal has the mottos, a palmetto tree and Roman goddess Spes. Native Americans made necklaces using the shells. This tradition continued into the early s when commercially made "panama shell" necklaces were popular with tourists. It joined Carolina which was adopted in Found throughout the US, the Carolina Wolf Spider is inches long and often mistaken for the much more dangerous brown recluse. When the bill designating this symbol was passed in , legislators declared that it had been used "to beautify all areas of South Carolina. The current sword, engraved with the state flower and seal, was a gift in He based the design on the Royal Stewart tartan, which is believed to have been used on a ceremonial coat of King Charles II. The Carolinas were created by a grant issued by the king. They also tolerate salt spray and sandy soil and can even withstand ice and snow. This cool-season crop grows across the state and should be planted early enough in the spring so that it is ready for harvest before temperatures become too hot. The music, evolved over a period of perhaps years or more, has been passed down by ear through generations of the Richardson family. The waltz is a traditional European musical form. Its bright yellow blooms appear in the fall. Tall Goldenrod became the state wildflower in when championed by garden clubs. Wild Turkeys are very good fliers. Even though they fly relatively close to the ground and only for short distances, they can reach speeds of up to 50 miles per hour!
