Some, such as First Minister Rhodri Morgan, deemed Big Brother contestant Glyn Wise worthy of the epithet after the year-old displayed his Welsh patriotism on the programme. In the absence of latter-day warrior princes it is telling that such ordinary folk, albeit in extraordinary situations, can be labelled thus. And of all the 15 shortlists in our "living Welsh greats" series, it is the category of "inspirational figures" that has thrown up the most diverse range of contenders. On our list the essential Welsh spirit can be found in the contrasting examples of ex-soldier Simon Weston, who has overcome tremendous personal adversity to help a generation of young Welsh people harness their potential, and that of Rowan Williams, the first Welshman to hold the post of Archbishop of Canterbury in modern times. And a humble year-old chip shop owner Constance Brown co-exists with an organ donation campaigner Gaynor Taylor. Roy Noble, a broadcaster always ready with a bon mot or timeless homily, and regarded by many as an inspiration in his own right, had his own thoughts on our shortlist. But while we can all similarly laud certain well-known Welsh sports stars, cultural icons or world-beaters in their fields we can also just as readily think of those personal heroes - former teachers, friends, relatives or colleagues - who have overcome tragedy or who act with heroic selflessness on a daily basis. For Noble, it all essentially came down to celebrating the contribution of our unsung heroes. Those individuals often overlooked as "mere" cogs in the machine, the glue binding together the very fabric of society, without which our notions of community would fall apart. It also brought to mind the Swansea Valley chip shop owners of his youth in Brynaman. Shop owners like that are all hubs on a wheel, patches on an inspirational quilt. We will be featuring each category separately throughout the summer. So, pick your favourite person in each category only one person per category will be counted and email your selections to greats@wme.com. He went on to set up Weston Spirit, a youth charity tackling problems of social exclusion, and has been awarded an OBE for his charity work. Dr Williams, a fluent Welsh-speaker and poet, has not been afraid to criticise Government policy in Afghanistan and Iraq during his tenure. Still working from 9am to 4pm each day, and still doing her own household cleaning, Mrs Brown was rewarded with an MBE earlier this year. Gwyneth Poacher More than 20 years ago Mrs Poacher, one of the first Macmillan nurses in Wales, started a monthly lunch club with her four cancer patients at the Sandville Hotel in Porthcawl. Today her centre in Ton Kenfig, near Bridgend, offers a range of invaluable services to people with terminal illnesses. In alone the charity helped provide education to more than , girls. This tireless charity chief executive has since earned the title Western Mail Welsh Woman of the Year and, to date, the charity has raised millions of pounds to help grant the wishes of terminally-ill children with cancer. Margaret Thrush Dressed in her trademark orange sombrero and shorts, this fundraising veteran has spent the past five decades collecting for charity in her native Mumbles. Earning the respect of Catherine Zeta-Jones and picking up an MBE along the way, she is reputed to have raised a staggering 1m for local charity during that time. Rosie Swale-Pope Lifelong adventurer Swale-Pope has run marathons and sailed around the world in her time. But the Tenby-based grandmother is currently two-thirds of the way through an epic 20,mile walk around the world in aid of various cancer and orphan charities, having already travelled across Europe, Asia and parts of Alaska. Tina Huelin Since leaving the armed forces and buying a run-down council house 20 years ago, Huelin has become a self-made property millionaire by buying a portfolio of dozens of houses. The mother-of-two has since gone on to found Handywoman, a company that provides tradeswomen to businesses and individuals. Gaynor Taylor Mrs Taylor has campaigned for more people to join the organ donor register since the tragic death of her year-old son in Richard, a skating champion, died when he collided with a lamppost as he practised near his Barry home but as a registered organ donor he helped seven people to benefit from much-needed transplants.
