Her music did not have a lot of gimmicks, and at times even felt simple. Her lyrics were way more honest and true-to-heart than what you typically heard on CCM radio. On the contrary, Sara has been a risk-taker, usually erring on the side of art she can be proud to stand behind rather than making music to appease the masses which I know she would be capable of doing. These songwriting convictions have put Sara Groves in a category where many people including fellow songwriters consider her to be one of the more brilliant and respected artists today. The world changed on September 11, Americans found themselves in a new reality. This song came at a time when I really needed my hope in praise songwriting to be renewed. Well, when you start a song with the words, "I have been talking to You since I was a little girl," it pretty much kills its corporate value. Feel the power of this line: This is a prayerful tune sung over a child that has connected deeply with young parents myself included. We often see ourselves even our flaws in our children, which is cause enough for panic. But Sara turns this into a gentle moment of reflection and prayer: When I was in my teens and 20s, I really wanted to grasp a deeper knowledge of God. In recent years, I have learned that the deeper you explore the things of God the more mysterious and ungraspable they become. God is much bigger than my mental limitations. We are at times like the recently exiled Hebrews who grumbled to Moses about wanting to go back into slavery because they were confused or impatient about where God was taking them. I am convinced that this song will still be in my top playlist 30 years from now and will continue to hold its own. The military-style drum rolls, the choir, the gospel vibe will all help this song to remain timeless musically. And the call in this song to have a more courageous faith will always be needed in my life. I see his family returning with no trace of fear. I am a sucker for some good astrological metaphors. This song is a good reminder that we cannot take credit for the good, the beauty, the love that we give. We often think we are sharing light from within our core being, but Sara paints a different picture: This is not an easy song for me to listen to. The reason why it has connected so deeply with me is because finding community this deep has only come sparingly in recent years. But it is still the cry of my heart: When I think about what I am thankful for, I usually first go to the places in life where everything seems to be going well. I want that too. Sara sings with incredible vulnerability about going through a season where she was riddled with panic attacks. This takes the cake because of two big reasons. First, I love the message of this song - that no matter how dark the situation, there is always cause to hope. Second, the song has a powerful musical twist, starting quite acoustic, then launching into a mighty orchestral melody, showcasing the powerful punch that hope can bring. Which of these songs are your favorites? We would love to read your thoughts in the comment section below.

But I find that some of the best music requires an effort - and rewards it, too. First, the claims that these lyrics are not up to her normal par are not correct. There is some true depth here, and some true poetry, as in all her albums. Second, the arrangements may be adventurous, but they are well played and they make sense artistically. The claim that there are no "standouts" here is just groundless in my opinion. The lyrics are in the confessional vein she has made her trademark. And the lyrics are simple but meaningful. She sings with conviction - and power! I like the arrangement. A truly good track. This song is a 10, for sure. The first time I heard it was in concert, and it brought tears to my eyes, especially after hearing the testimony surrounding her writing of it. It just blew me away. Just perfect in every way. She pulls this off very well. Give her credit for being adventurous. Again, this song has a very personal testimony she shares in concert. It moved me to sponsor a child in Africa through World Vision, which Sara is a spokesperson for. Pretty adventurous if you ask me. She explained in concert that she improvised the lyrics while the band just jammed. This is her first time attempting anything like this. Again, give her credit for "pushing the envelope! A beautiful use of metaphor. It may not grab you at first, but let it into your heart. The people who are saying nothing stood out for them on this CD Listen to the background singers sing "little wooden animals" - it will crack you up! D "Like A Skin" is very personal and confessional again. The arrangement is sublime. Again, you need to give it a chance. You could blame her for running short of original material, but why? So there you have it. This CD has a couple of challenging tracks, but the rest of the songs are classic Sara, even if their appeal may sometimes be more sublime than her past stuff, or the arrangements a bit more adventurous. The Album is new in sound as Sara explores areas she never did for the excellent All Right here and Conversations. The new sound is more upbeat, edgy and pop than either of her previous 2 Cds and hence will not be as appealing to hear as the other albums for such fans. The fair reviews are probably coming from fans who were akin to her sound AND down to earth and honest lyrics. The lyrics are still as great as ever and probably the best so far at least IMO. Sara explores her faith deeper than ever The Lyrics are even more emphasized than the sweet and innocent ones of All right here and more generalized than Conversations as Sara is torn between doubts, fears, faith and perseverance with all this applied in real life situations. God has drawn me close to Himself SO many times through her lyrics. He has brought me to tears and revealed sin in my life through her music. God is good, and He has blessed Sara Groves. This is definitely my least favorite of the 3 cds. I like a lot of the songs as fun songs to sing, but there just seemed to be some of the usual honesty and clarity missing. The lyrics more then anything else seemed watered down to me though. I have all her albums, and have seen her in concert. God definitely speaks through her. That said, this album was a bit of a disappointment. The messages that she imparts are still there you just have to wade through the mud. I gave it 4 stars for the messages otherwise I would have given it 3 stars. But, really the music is secondary to the messages and the main melodies and that is true for all her albums. The highlight of this album are the demo tracks on the second disc. I want to feel the fire in my bones as he did. This spoke to me as I was wondering where was God? Even if I sometimes give up on him. I also really like Come Thou Fount which is a hymn that Sara has done a new arrangement for. I also like Compelled. The title of the album is taken from this song. The lyrics really make me think. I was thinking it would be hard to be a slave to someone. But then we are slaves to alot of things money, shopping, TV etc. Christ is a much better master. On this album, as on All Right Here she sings songs about her husband. They are truely beautiful ballads and help show that a marriage that has God in it is a wonderful thing even when things are not going well. Or maybe especially then. Well I hope this helps.
