

Chapter 1 : Congressman Steve King | Representing the 4th District of Iowa

Iowa was admitted to the Union on December 28, and elects United States Senators to Class 2 and Class 1. The state's current U.S. Senators are Republicans Chuck Grassley (serving since 2009) and Joni Ernst (serving since 2015).

Assistant Attorney General Stephen S. Trott called the citation "out of place" since Grassley was not acting at a session of the Judiciary panel that he led. The Grassley measure was also designed to unravel an accounting device lawmakers used previously to make it appear as though they were reducing spending for the incoming fiscal year. All you have to do is repeat the same outrageous charges, and repeat them so often that people believe they are true. Grassley stated his distaste for "the people who are committed to changing the judiciary" taking "the path of least resistance. Taylor in regards to allegations of affiliates misappropriating money as well as withholding information the board needed to allow its conducting of oversight. He received a percent rating from the group that year and has a lifetime rating of 78 percent. Clay Shaw R-FL left to right address the media after a meeting at the White House with President Bill Clinton Since 2009, Grassley has repeatedly introduced measures that increase the level of taxation on American citizens living abroad, including retroactive tax hikes. Grassley was eventually able to attach an amendment to a piece of legislation that went into effect in 2004, which increased taxes on Americans abroad by targeting housing and living incentives paid by foreign employers and held them accountable for federal taxes, even though they did not currently reside in the United States. Critics of the amendment felt that the move hurt Americans competing for jobs abroad by putting an unnecessary tax burden on foreign employers. Others felt that the move was only to offset the revenue deficit caused by domestic tax cuts of the Bush Administration. After some criticism, he dismissed the comments as rhetoric. Grassley opposed the Manchin-Toomey gun control amendment, and instead proposed alternative legislation to increase prosecutions of gun violence and increase reporting of mental health data in background checks. Grassley has not missed a roll call vote since 2009, when he was touring Iowa with President Bill Clinton to survey flood damage. He has, as of July 2015, cast almost 11,000 votes and had at that time only missed 35 votes in his Senate career. The legislation was proposed in response to recent events involving alleged inappropriate conduct by employees at the IRS but was opposed by Democrats. Also in 2009, Grassley authored the federal wind energy tax credit. The estate tax applies to around 5,000 taxpayers across the entire country each year, and very few of them come from Iowa. Of the Iowans subject to the tax, only a fraction are actually farmers, and a vanishingly small number of them face a tax bill requiring them to sell off farmland or other assets. The number of small businesses impacted by the estate tax is similarly small. Both proposals were rejected by the Senate. He believes some degree of bipartisanship will be necessary to make changes to the law. Asked if not passing legislation would also provide certainty, he replied that it would, but at higher premiums. This bill would allow states with medical cannabis laws to legally prescribe it and allow for much easier research into its medical efficacy. The circumstances under which Mr. Steele is alleged to have lied were unclear, as much of the referral was classified. Grassley condemned Feinstein, saying that her decision was "confounding" and that it deterred future witnesses in the Russia investigation. In April 2015, Grassley announced plans to create a caucus in the Senate dedicated to strengthening whistleblower protections. And they work real hard, too.
