Simple future tense used in sentences: They will go to New York tomorrow. You shall see a play this fall. I will walk to school tomorrow. Beware of the Simple Present As noted above, the simple present is not only used for actions happening in the present. It can be used for actions not currently occurring and for actions in the future. To express habitual actions or repeated events: We ride horses every afternoon. The sun rises in the East. The rain falls heavily in February. To express future after a conjunction: I eat dinner when my mom says it is time. The Simple Aspect The simple aspect is the verb form used to express a fact. The simple aspect can be confusing because it does not delineate if the action is a complete action or a habitual action. The audience must use context clues to determine the nature of the fact. This is a fact; however, it is unclear whether this action is habitual or just a fact. To provide more context: On Sundays, he chews gum. Now it is clear that this is a habitual action, not just a fact. What is Simple Tense?
