A bit romantic, but nearly 30 years on this book is still useful as a resource for Daimler Benz history. If you are a fan of classic Mercedes Vehicles this book is one of the first book I would recommend.

Common schticks included crying in cases of great predicaments, taking instructions literally at all times and mixing up his lines. He and Hardy often had a scene in their films where they would get into a fight with another person that consisted solely of destroying property. The duo would destroy something the opponent values while the opponent looks on and does not resist. When they are done, the opponent does the same to them, while they refrain from resisting, and so on. Wide, "hanger-in-my-mouth" smile, spiky hair sported in all of his films, and of course, the "whiny face" for which he is famous. Completely vacant stare into the camera, accentuated by white pancake makeup. Gaze into the camera with arms up and palms out in a "What now? Trivia His light blue eyes almost ended his movie career before it began. Until the early s, filmmakers used black-and-white Orthochromatic film stock, which was "blue blind". When Laurel teamed with Oliver Hardy , the team made Stevens their cameraman of choice. Had two children with his first wife, Lois: Laurel first appeared with his future partner, Oliver Hardy , in The Lucky Dog , which was filmed in , but not released until He always thought that his "whining face" was humiliating, but the producers forced him to do it in most of his movies since the public loved it. Suffered a nervous breakdown on the death of his longtime film partner and friend, Oliver Hardy , and according to his friends, never fully recovered. Had always been a huge fan of westerns, and after he became a success, his company, Stan Laurel Productions, financed a series of low-budget musical westerns starring singing cowboy Fred Scott. He is shown with his partner Oliver Hardy. The stamp designs were drawn by caricaturist Al Hirschfeld. He and Mae Laurel lived as a common-law couple, as Mae was legally married to someone in her native Australia when she met Stan in They parted in by mutual consent and Mae returned to Australia. Van Dyke even got to perform that impersonation on one of the episodes of The Dick Van Dyke Show and after it premiered, he called Laurel to ask his opinion. The death of his partner Oliver Hardy left him a broken man, so much so that he fell into a deep depression and swore never to do comedy again. Fell off a platform and tore ligaments in his right leg during the filming of Babes in Toyland An extra named John Wood from the film Babes in Toyland sued him and his stunt double, Ham Kinsey , claiming back injuries after Laurel and Kinsey threw him in the ducking pond on the set. Is portrayed by Jim Plunkett in Harlow In his later years, he was a close friends with Dick Van Dyke. He was greatly admired by Jerry Lewis. When Lewis had his own production company in the early s, he repeatedly tried to hire Stan for his creative team. Stan refused, despite the impressive salary. According to Lewis, he would send scripts to Stan who would read them and write suggestions in the margins. Is portrayed by Matthew Cottle in Chaplin Stan was greatly admired by Peter Sellers. Sellers claimed that the "Laurel" character was his inspiration when he created the "gardener" character in Being There While rarely credited as a writer or director, he was the driving creative force behind the team of he and Oliver Hardy --whenever Hardy was asked a question about a gag, story idea, plotline, etc. In his later years, he was arguably the most approachable of all movie stars, keeping his phone number in the phone book, welcoming all sorts of visitors, and responding to his fan mail personally. His partner Oliver Hardy was an inveterate golfer, often setting up his own little putting green on the set so he could practice between takes. When the reporter asked if he had any bad habits, Laurel--who had been married and divorced five times--replied, "Yes, and I married them. Suffered a stroke in June Although Stan is recorded as being born in Ulverston Cumbria, he never knew it. He was actually born in Ulverston Lancashire. Ulverston became part of Cumbria under the "Local Government Act " and became part of Cumbria two years later in ; nine years after Stan died. A comedian until the very last, Stan Laurel, just minutes away from death on February 23, , told his nurse he would not mind going skiing right at that very moment. Somewhat taken aback, the nurse replied that she was not aware that he was a skier. He was a staunch Democrat. He was a heavy smoker until he suddenly gave up when he was about seventy. Laurel insisted that the quote attributed to him, "You know my hobbies; I married them all. Because the Roach studio was smaller than the majors, the indoor sets were relatively close to each other, and the actors often visited other sets between takes. Stan removed the heels from his shoes while filming. It helped him accent his already humorous walk. He and Babe had shaved their heads to play convicts in The Second Years, and it grew back very unevenly and refused to stay down. Others on the Roach lot laughed, so Stan began to cultivate the new look. Offscreen, he combed it straight back, as did Oliver Hardy. As his old friend Hardy, who was broke by the end of his career because of his horse track bets, Stan Laurel also knew financial difficulties because of his many ailments. He is often thought of as being very short and skinny. When Stan started his film career, motion pictures were being shot on orthochromatic film which did not record blue. This became a problem for performers who, like Stan, had blue eyes. He was able to turn this to his advantage. At appropriate times, he would stare directly into the camera and his blue eyes would record as very pale or white which gave his character a vacuous appearance. They made their first appearance in the centre spread of the English comic Film Fun in issue dated November which moved to the front page in March and remained there until The popularity of the strip found it syndicated abroad where in Italy it appeared in Bombolo in and Cine Comico, a film weekly. The same year a rival company produced the Mastro Remo comic with them on the cover in a strip in colour called Stan e Oli. In France in there was a colour strip of them in Cri-Cri. At the apartment block where he lived in later years he even went down to the lobby to collect his mail rather than phone down and ask for it to be taken up to him. Stan was instrumental in the career of Marcel Marceau. After seeing him perform in Paris in he praised him as an unsung genius and helped him gain attention in the French press. Educated at Bishop Auckland Grammar School - where he was often in the staff room entertaining the teachers. In he fell out with Hal Roach over the script of Babes in Toyland and their close working relationship never recovered. Of his five marriages his stormiest was that to Illiana Shufvalova which only lasted a year. By the time they produced their first true Laurel and Hardy film Stan was 37 and Ollie Billy Wilder planned on doing a film with him and Oliver Hardy in the s. The plot centered on a woman coming between them. When he and Chaplin went to America in they did so on a cattle boat. When it was flushed the toilet sank into the floor. In a production of The Sleeping Beauty he was promoted from supporting actor to be the featured comedian. The production included Wee Georgie Wood, who was then The two sections would be joined together then copied and joined many times for repetition. Filmed in slow motion then projected at normal speed the ears would wave vigorously. Never appeared in a film nominated for the Best Picture Oscar. As a boy his early education took place at a kindergarten in a house in Dockwray Square, North Shields, near to where his family lived, a private school in Tynemouth College, a boarding school Stan said he thought this was because he was always getting into mischief and trouble at home. Charlotte Mae Dahlberg Dahlberg was her maiden name was part of a double act with Stan and claimed that she gave Stan his surname. She was supposedly looking through a book and saw a picture of a Roman general with a laurel wreath on his head. As Stan was superstitious and his name had 13 letters in it he was more than happy to take up her suggestion of adopting the name of Laurel. Later he renamed it Ida Mae after his last wife. Stan was only the second honoree to receive a Screen Actors Guild Award for their contribution to entertainment. Educated at Queens Park School, Glasgow. King James Grammar School in Bishop Auckland, Co Durham where Stan was partly educated was seriously damaged by an arson attack in and over 10 years later the ruins remain surrounded by scaffolding and tarpaulin sheets waiting for some kind of decision to be made on what to do with it. The Merry Old Soul. His first short film, Nuts in May won him a contract with Universal but soon after his film career seemed to be at an end and he returned to vaudeville. Hal Roach, who he would make many of his films let him go twice. By Stan had come to think that his true gift lay in writing and directing rather than in performing. Stan and Ollie believed that they got most of their laughs by combining dumbness with dignity making the audience feel that they were superior to them. As a child in Glasgow, his family lived at 17 Craigmillar Road. Hal Roach let him go twice. In their films Stan wore a Bowler hat a size or two smaller so that it sat higher on his head. Although they were identified with Bowlers they actually wore more other hats in their many films and when they were on their European tours they eagerly donned the appropriate national hat of the country they were in- Berets in Paris, Tam O Shanter in Scotland. They could go through as many as a dozen hats in a month of filming. Although Stan wore a traditional bowler in their early films he soon switched to a flat brimmed one. After the death of Ollie Stan never publicly wore one again and no photographs are known to exist of him in one from that time. Although The Boys were known for wearing Bowlers film for film they wore them less often than believed. At some point they parted company but with the act being so successful Bob found another partner - Stan, who later reworked the act with Ollie in the film Hollywood Review of

The first film pairing of the two, although as separate performers, took place in the silent film The Lucky Dog in . The exact date the film was produced is not recorded but film historian Bo Berglund dated it between late and January . He brought the team together and they worked for Hal Roach Studios for over 20 years. His uncle, played by Hardy, is shown trying to put trousers on him. I always explain that we came together naturally. After teaming up they played the same characters for 30 years. Horne on the Laurel and Hardy films, Laurel would rewrite entire sequences or scripts. He would also have the cast and crew improvise on the sound stage; he would then meticulously review the footage during the editing process. I think I earned my money". Laurel and Hardy avoided this pitfall because they continued making primarily visual films. While Laurel and Hardy could not speak these foreign languages they received voice coaching for their lines. The film Babes in Toyland remains a perennial on American television during the Christmas season. Laurel was unhappy with the plot, and after an argument was allowed to make the film his way. Nevertheless, their association continued for another six years. The Fox films were so profitable that the studio kept making Laurel and Hardy comedies after Fox discontinued its other "B" series films. A film named "Robin Hood" was planned to be filmed during the tour but was not realized. The team in limbo, Stan still encouraged Babe to take big and small movie parts. In 1951, Laurel and Hardy made their final feature-length film together, Atoll K. This film was a French-Italian co-production directed by Leo Joannon , but was plagued by problems with language barriers, production issues, and the serious health issues of both Laurel and Hardy. Laurel was experiencing painful prostate complications as well. He quickly rewrote the screenplay and hired old American friend, Alf Goulding , to direct the Laurel and Hardy scenes, considered to be their best footage since Hal Roach. Stan did take part in a silent newsreel, Swim Meet, in character, as co-director of a local California contest. Most Laurel and Hardy films have survived and have not gone out of circulation permanently. Three of their films are considered lost and have not been seen in their complete form since the s. In the operatic Technicolor musical The Rogue Song , Laurel and Hardy appear in 10 sequences and only one of which is known to exist with the complete soundtrack. Upon their return to the European stage in , they undertook a well-received series of public appearances, performing a short sketch Laurel had written called "A Spot of Trouble". Hoping to repeat the success the following year Laurel wrote a routine entitled "Birds of a Feather". Laurel recounted their reception: The love and affection we found that day at Cobh was simply unbelievable. There were hundreds of boats blowing whistles and mobs and mobs of people screaming on the docks. And then something happened that I can never forget. All the church bells in Cobh started to ring out our theme song "Dance of the Cuckoos" and Babe Oliver Hardy looked at me and we cried. These shows do not appear to have been preserved on record, tape, or kinescope, but notes from the Face The Music television appearance have been recently discovered. According to the notes, Ollie informs Stan that the television program has an audience of six million and that host Henry Hall is "going to introduce us to them". Lured to the Knickerbocker Hotel as a subterfuge for a business meeting with producer Bernard Delfont the doors opened to their suite , flooding the room with light and the voice of Edwards. This telecast was preserved on a kinescope and later released on home video. Partly due to the positive response from the television broadcast the pair was renegotiating with Hal Roach, Jr. However, plans for the specials had to be shelved as the aging comedians continued to suffer from declining health. Laurel and Hardy provided a filmed insert in which they reminisce about their friends in British variety. It contains no audio and is three minutes in length. However, he suffered several strokes that resulted in the loss of mobility and speech. During this period most of his communication was in the form of written correspondence and he insisted on answering every fan letter personally. Mae Busch often played the formidable Mrs. Hardy and other characters, particularly sultry femme fatales. Dorothy Coburn appeared in nearly a dozen early silent shorts. Baldwin Cooke played bit parts as a waiter, a bartender or a cop. Richard Cramer appeared as a scowling, menacing villain or opponent. Bobby

Dunn appeared as a cross-eyed bartender and telegram messenger, as well as the genial shoplifter in Tit for Tat. Eddie Dunn made several appearances, notably as the belligerent taxi driver in Me and My Pal. James Finlayson, a balding, mustachioed Scotsman known for displays of indignation and squinting, pop-eyed "double takes," made 33 appearances and is perhaps their most celebrated foil. Anita Garvin appeared in a number of Laurel and Hardy films, often cast as Mrs. Billy Gilbert made many appearances, most notably as bombastic, blustery foreign characters such as those in The Music Box and Block-Heads. Charlie Hall, who usually played angry, diminutive adversaries, appeared nearly 50 times. Jean Harlow had a small role in the silent short Double Whoopee and two other films in the early part of her career. Arthur Housman made several appearances as a comic drunk. Edgar Kennedy, master of the "slow burn," often appeared as a cop, a hostile neighbor or a relative. Walter Long played grizzled, unshaven, physically threatening villains. Sam Lufkin appeared several times, usually as a cop or streetcar conductor. Charles Middleton made a handful of appearances, usually as a sourpuss adversary. Morton appeared as a bartender or exasperated policeman. Vivien Oakland appeared in several early silent films, and later talkies including Scram! Viola Richard appeared in several early silent films, most notably as the beautiful cave girl in Flying Elephants. Charley Rogers, an English actor and gag writer, appeared several times. Tiny Sandford was a tall, burly, physically imposing character actor who played authority figures, notably cops. Thelma Todd appeared several times before her own career as a leading lady comedienne. Ben Turpin, the cross-eyed Mack Sennett comedy star, made two memorable appearances. Ellinor Vanderveer made many appearances as a dowager, high society matron or posh party guest. The original theme, recorded by two clarinets in , was recorded again with a full orchestra in . Leroy Shield composed the majority of the music used in the Laurel and Hardy short sound films. The title track was released as a single in the UK and reached 2 in the charts. Influence and legacy[edit] Silhouette portrait of the duo in Redcar, England Posthumous revivals and popular culture[edit] Since the s, the works of Laurel and Hardy have been released again in numerous theatrical reissues, television revivals broadcast, especially public television and cable, 16 mm and 8 mm home movies, feature-film compilations and home video. Although the results of adding color were often in dispute, many popular titles are currently only available in the colorized version. The color process often renders the print into an unwatchable state, with some scenes being altered or deleted, depending on the source material used. Colorization was a success for the studio and Helpmates was released on home video with the colorized version of The Music Box in . There are three Laurel and Hardy museums. For Love or Mummy. The Sons of the Desert The official Laurel and Hardy appreciation society is known as The Sons of the Desert, after a fraternal society in their film of the same name. Around the world[edit] Laurel and Hardy are popular around the world but are known under different names in various countries and languages.

He was one of five children. In his early years, the boy spent much time living with his maternal grandmother, Sarah Metcalfe. His boyhood hero was Dan Leno , one of the greatest English music hall comedians. He just taught us most of it". He was not called up; his registration card states resident alien and deafness as exemptions. Between and , he teamed up with Alice Cooke and Baldwin Cooke , who became his lifelong friends. Amongst other performers, Laurel worked briefly alongside Oliver Hardy before the two were a team in the silent film short The Lucky Dog . After making his first film Nuts in May , Universal offered him a contract. The contract was soon cancelled during a reorganisation at the studio. Among the films in which Dahlberg and Laurel appeared together was the parody Mud and Sand. By , Laurel had given up the stage for full-time film work, under contract with Joe Rock for 12 two-reel comedies. The contract had one unusual stipulation: Pryde , Half a Man . Laurel and Hardy[edit] Main article: Laurel next signed with the Hal Roach studio, where he began directing films, including a production called Yes, Yes, Nanette. He intended to work primarily as a writer and director. Oliver Hardy , another member of the Hal Roach Studios Comedy All Star players, was injured in a kitchen mishap in , and Laurel was asked to return to acting. The two became friends and their comic chemistry soon became obvious. Laurel and Hardy successfully made the transition to talking films with the short Unaccustomed As We Are in . They also appeared in their first feature in one of the revue sequences of The Hollywood Revue of , and the following year they appeared as the comic relief in the lavish all-colour in Technicolor musical feature The Rogue Song. Their first starring feature Pardon Us was released in . They continued to make both features and shorts until , including their three-reeler The Music Box , which won an Academy Award for Best Short Subject. Trouble at Roach Studio[edit] During the s, Laurel was involved in a dispute with Hal Roach which resulted in the termination of his contract. Roach maintained separate contracts for Laurel and Hardy that expired at different times, so Hardy remained at the studio and was "teamed" with Harry Langdon for the film Zenobia. Eventually, the case was dropped and Laurel returned to Roach. Subsequently, they made Saps at Sea , which was their last film for Roach. During the war years, their work became more standardised and less successful, though The Bullfighters and Jitterbugs did receive some praise. In , Laurel returned to England when he and Hardy went on a six-week tour of the United Kingdom, and the duo were mobbed wherever they went. Around this time, Laurel found out that he had diabetes, so he encouraged Hardy to find solo projects which he did, taking parts in John Wayne and Bing Crosby films. In , Laurel and Hardy were invited to France to make a feature film. The film was a disaster, a Franco-Italian co-production titled Atoll K. Both stars were noticeably ill during the filming. Upon returning to the United States, they spent most of their time recovering. In , Laurel and Hardy toured Europe successfully, and they returned in for another tour of the continent. During this tour, Laurel fell ill and was unable to perform for several weeks. The plans were delayed after Laurel suffered a stroke on 25 April , from which he recovered. But as the team was planning to get back to work, his partner Hardy had a massive stroke on 14 September , which resulted in his being unable to return to acting. Laurel was too ill to attend his funeral and said, "Babe would understand". He refused to perform on stage or act in another film without his friend, [2] although he continued to socialise with his fans. He had achieved his lifelong dream as a comedian and had been involved in nearly films. His phone number OXford [18] [19] [20] [21] was listed in the telephone directory, [22] and fans were amazed that they could dial the number and speak to him directly. Lewis paid tribute to Laurel by naming his main character Stanley in the film, and having Bill Richmond play a version of Laurel as well. He did not want to be on screen in his old age, [4] especially without Hardy. Personal life[edit] Laurel and Mae Charlotte Dahlberg never married, but lived together as common-law husband and wife from to , before Dahlberg accepted a one-way ticket from Joe Rock to go back to her native Australia. The matter was settled out of court. Laurel had four wives and married one of them a second time after their divorce. In May , their second child, a son named Stanley, was born two months premature and died after nine days. In ,

Laurel filed for divorce from Ruth, confessing that he was not over his ex-wife Lois, but Lois decided against a reconciliation. The new marriage was very volatile. Illeana accused him of trying to bury her alive in the backyard of their San Fernando Valley home. Laurel was a heavy smoker until suddenly quitting around One is operated by the town of Harlem, and the other is a private museum owned and operated by Gary Russeth, a Harlem resident. In , Gail Louw and Jeffrey Holland debuted a short one-man play " And this is my friend Mr Laurel" at the Camden Fringe festival.
