It is probably around this time that his talents came to the attention of the king. He succeeded in both respects. Sadler failed in that respect, but the King was nonetheless impressed with his work. In he was elected knight of the shire MP for Middlesex. In the same year, he was knighted, made a privy councillor , and began more than 30 years of service representing Hertfordshire in Parliament. He represented Preston in The following morning, they were taken from Hampton Court , with their hands bound, accompanied by 24 archers, to the Tower. He was successful, although the marriage was not concluded. On return to London he was almost immediately replaced as secretary by the ambitious politico William Paget. On 10 August , Sir Ralph wrote to Henry VIII describing a visit to Mary of Guise and the infant Queen at Stirling Castle ; " Mary of Guise is very glad that she is at Stirling, and much she praised there about the house, and told me, "That her daughter did grow apace; and soon," she said, "she would be a woman, if she took of her mother;" who indeed, is of the largest stature of women. And therefore she caused also the child to be brought to me, to the intent I might see her, assuring your majesty, that she is a right fair and goodly child, as any that I have seen for her age. Miniature of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots Sadler was replaced by William Paget as Secretary of State in April , owing to his frequent absences on diplomatic missions, but was appointed Master of the Great Wardrobe and accompanied the Earl of Hertford , as treasurer for the war against Scotland, on a punitive expedition to Edinburgh in May Sadler accompanied Hertford once more into Scotland, in the same role, in September On 10 September , in recognition of his services during the fighting, Sadler was made a knight banneret . He signed the device settling the crown on the Protestant Jane Grey, and was noted by Lord Burghley as one of those expected to act on her behalf. In he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster , and when Mary, Queen of Scots, fled to England, Sadler was unwillingly appointed to meet with the Scottish commissioners regarding that problem. In one letter, Francis Walsingham chided Sadler for taking Mary "hawkyng" and for giving her "more lybertye now then at any tyme when she was in the E of Shrewsbury chardge. Sadler, a man devoted to his wife and children, was informed of the matter in October while on a diplomatic mission in Scotland. Despairing of an answer she returned to Clerkenwell. He took delight in attempting to discredit leading public figures in England. Sadler managed to prevent the publication of the Act and its details never appeared among the statutes of the period. His marriage to Ellen was saved and the couple lived on, without further incident, for many years. Copies of the orations appear the two-volume publication of his letters, which includes a biography by Walter Scott.
