How I use my Bullet Journal The beautiful thing about a quirky tool called the Bullet Journal is that there is no one right way to do it. As much as I love digital tools and still use several, old-fashioned paper gives me a lot of bang for my buck. I actually get more done, even online. Give yourself permission to screw up, scribble, tear out pages, and start all over. I actually first tried the method for a few months in a simple, not-special-to-me journal to gauge what I needed and wanted. Then I broke out the one you see in this post and still gave myself permission to not be perfect. This lasted exactly two pages, and I dutifully switched over to pencil. Was I tempted to start all over? It has to be a tool for me and not a slave. I brain dump my days with the Daily Log. I do use this feature, and this is my lifeline. These symbols are enough to keep it straight. I keep my calendar digital. I prefer a small notebook. I carry a small purse, and this way I can toss it in and use it all throughout the day. I also keep a sharpened pencil in my purse. I use washi tape to mark non-calendar pages. I still use the Table of Contents or Index , but the colored tape helps a lot. I keep it fancy-free. A condensed version of the Daily Examen , this is a simple list where I jot down one way I recognized God in my life that day. A mashup list of post topics, future guest ideas, tweaks for the site, and what-not. I add more to this list throughout my days there are many. I can never remember. This is my list of things to research when I can. For example, right now I have book notes on pages , but things to research on the next page, page I simply add a comma and another page number to that item on the Table of Contents. No need for it to be perfectly organized. In fact, this is key to my bullet journaling methodâ€”I keep on adding in the journal, one page at a time. What are you doing to make it work for you?

By Karen Creel I admit it. I am a magazine hoarder. I have them stacked in piles, and lined up on the bookshelf. I have great ambitions to tear out the pages of the things I think I will make, plant, or cook. But for now I just keep on buying them. I passed by the Country Woman Magazine at the grocery store the other day and was immediately drawn to the little teacups on the front cover. They were filled with small vintage animals, houses, and ornaments creating a winter wonderland in a teacup. Probably found in some of those stacks of magazines downstairs! I sent her a text asking if she had any teacups. Yay, and they were only 1. I added another that I had picked up at a local antique shop for just a little more. I had an idea in mind of what I wanted them to look like, so I gathered all my materials, and sat down to put them together. Starting with the green cup, I wanted this to look like a forest woodland scene, and to use my little garden gnome. I filled the teacup with rocks, then moss from my side yard. Next came placing the gnome, a little bottle tree, some red berries, and sprinkling the whole thing with artificial snow. I believe I am very happy with the results. My next teacup and saucer came from a local antique store, and I purchased the winter garden scene from Michaels. I wanted to use the artificial snow on this cup, so I filled in with a white plastic grocery bag. Next add the artificial snow, the winter garden scene, and bottle trees. These little teacups can be used all winter long to brighten your home.
