

Chapter 1 : The dreaded room joining door. - Review of Roundtop Mountain Motel, Thermopolis, WY - Trip

The "Dreaded Circular Room" The surgical amphitheatre in the center of the Pine Building of the Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia was completed in , being the first surgical facility of its kind in the United States.

Meanwhile, Helga is angry with herrs Flick and Von Smallhausen disguised as gypsies thinking they have started the fire and insists they have gone too far. Herr Flick claims their innocence and forces Helga to create a diversion, while they escape from the room. General Von Klinkerhoffen blames the incident on the gypsies and orders that they be arrested. They fail at this and are forced to hide under the bed. The next moment, the door is opened and the disguised Gestapo agents enter the room. As there are more people coming, the two of them hide in the wardrobe. As the safe is blown open, the wardrobe is blown to smithereens. While Edith and Yvette on the roof notice several well known voices through the chimneys and realise the operation has gone wrong - hence deciding to flee - herr Flick notices the ladder outside the window. He and Von Smallhausen climb down it and commandeer the fire engine on the ground to escape in. There, they overhear the conversation between the Germans, learning that those paintings are the originals. Michelle and Crabtree enter the room, informing the Germans that the fire has been put out. They leave through the window, but as the fire engine is gone, they have to walk home. As Gruber assumes the gypsies have stolen the fire engine, the general orders "all gypsies driving fire engines" to be arrested. In fact, this goes for everyone not wearing a German uniform. Michelle and Crabtree join them soon after, Michelle being somewhat cross with whoever dropped the smoke canister down the wrong chimney. Edith admits to be the guilty one. There, they find themselves at gunpoint from the communist resistance. The lorry leaves town. The next day, Gruber, dressed in civilian clothes, comes to see colonel Von Strohm in his office, where captain Bertorelli is telling him about Rome. As Helga has announced him, he tells the colonel that he has serious news and also mentions he is out of uniform because his was stolen last night. After Bertorelli has been ordered to leave, Gruber tells Von Strohm and Helga that the paintings have been stolen. As they have now been stolen, they can satisfy the general by giving him two forgeries, but they still need to get the originals back. They are then strapped to a board, facing each other and with a big circular saw blade between their legs. LeClerc manages to reach the buttons to operate the blade, with which he will try to cut the ropes around his wrists. He pushes the green button, which starts the blade. As he presses the red button, it is not turned off, but the board starts moving back and forth, almost cutting both of them in two. Fortunately the communists enter in time and switch off the main power. Herr Flick, wearing bandages on his head and arm after the explosion, receives Helga at his headquarters. Von Smallhausen is lying on a bed, having bandages all over his body. While Helga prepares a cup of tea, herr Flick tells her that he has come to the conclusion that the safe blew up because there were explosives kept in it - explosives that were to be used in the plot to blow up Hitler. As the colonel leaves, Helga enters and starts flirting with Gruber. While Crabtree is using the town convenience, the three girls climb into the tank and start it up. Gruber becomes distracted and worried, when he hears the sound of the engine, and rushes out to see what is happening. Edith then crashes the tank into the town convenience, with officer Crabtree in it. In this episode, Rose Hill is once again credited without appearing and Kirsten Cooke Michelle is credited as the second person to appear on screen, even though it is actually Jack Haig LeClerc who does so. As the general threatens Gruber with being sent to the Russian front, he says "you could find yourself in Vladivostock by the end of the week".

Chapter 2 : Cassie Stephens: In the Art Room: That Dreaded Art Supply Order

The highlight of the tour, though, has to be the architecturally stunning space that earned the nickname "The Dreaded Circular Room." A public flaying with no anesthesia.

I like the Alpha color Biggie Cakes but the plastic holder the cakes come in pretty much blows. This is the set I buy every couple of years and I love them. I usually order the generic version of these For construction paper, the only way to go is Tru-Ray, I think. I hate that fade-y thin stuff. I usually order about 5 packs of black they come in packs of 50 sheets for framing and for the rest, I usually get a rainbow of variety. For multi-purpose paper, I order about 4 reams of 80 lbs drawing paper, 12" X 18". I like the heavier paper because I can then use it for drawing, painting, collage, etc. Fun but not necessary. I do like to order the kind that bleeds so we can do projects like this. When I first started teaching, I thought they were all alike. I like to use the Biggie ones but I try to have both sizes for the kids. Gah, what a headache. Why do we have to stab them? I usually invest in the white erasers as they work the very best. I try to encourage the kids to leave the clothes on the eraser eraser condom? They think these are the very best things ever but you have to be careful, they might walk outta your room. Oh, this reminds me! My biggest issue with colored pencils is that they 1. Are Crap and 2. I usually order that box of Cray-pas on the left. This year I was really only in need of yellow, white and black so I simply ordered refills. If you wanna get fancy, I love those Crayola Portfolio oil pastels. There are two kind of fine tipped Sharpie makers and the one above is my fave. The other fine tip seems to run out ink faster. While the tip of these sometimes splits, I do find that they last a bit longer. I also invest in the larger tipped black Sharpies. For me, they are like crayons: For that reason, I invest in one of these every other year. Crayola is okay when it comes to makers they do seem to run out fast, if you ask me but they are better than Mr. Sketch but the constant marker huffing wears me out. I used to be a Fiskars Girl, all the way. But, sadly, their quality has gone downhill fast. My last couple of orders the scissor handle would overlap causing me to pinch my hand. Instead I keep the glue in small lidded cups and the kids apply it with an old paint brush. And there you have it! And what would YOU recommend?

Before diving into how he has played, it is important to note that Samsonov is only years-old and is adjusting to a completely different game and a completely different life in a new country. Nothing about his play thus far necessarily means he will or will not live up to the lofty expectations that have been placed on his shoulders. The numbers thus far, are not glowing. Samsonov has played in six games with the Hershey Bears and has posted a 3. Some of those numbers are due to the fact that Hershey was horrendously bad at the start of the season, losing its first five games in regulation and being largely non-competitive in the majority of those games. Check out the highlights here: That is not necessarily a bad thing. Domink Hasek, for example, always looked like his hair was on fire when he played no, I am not comparing Samsonov to Hasek, merely using him as an example, settle down. Samsonov appears to have a chaotic style of play. The positive to note is that he is extremely good down low. He is a very big goalie and uses his size to his advantage when it comes to covering the net with his pads. He is pretty fast with kick out saves and generally tough to beat when players try to beat him low. Having said that, everything above the pads needs some work. At development camp, I noticed watching Samsonov that, as big as he was, he tended to play really low almost as if to compensate for how big he is. I am seeing the same sort of thing here. One area in clear need of improvement is on the posts. In both games from the above highlights, he lets in a soft goal because he cannot cover the post. A goalie needs to be able to hug and square himself to the post to take away all holes for a player to shoot at. There is also definite room for improvement with his glove. If you get your hand on a shot, you need to be able to stop it. Screens appear to be an issue as well. In the second goal Samsonov gives up in the second game, he gets caught sliding in the wrong direction around a screen. Samsonov leans right trying to peek around the screen and he begins sliding over out of position when the shot is released. In the large playing surfaces of the European rink, screens do not play as much of a factor because there is so much more ice for players to work with. Offenses are not set up to generate much traffic in front of the net. Obviously, the North American game is quite different in that respect. Clearly this is an area in which Samsonov still needs to adjust. There is a lot of excitement over Samsonov from Caps fans and for good reason, but his early play shows that it is going to take him some time still to adjust. That will most likely mean Samsonov will start both games, but Parker Milner did play well in his lone start last week and head coach Spencer Carbery could spit the starts between the two. The biggest takeaway from the piece is how important learning English will be to his development. It matters more for a goalie than most players, according to development coach Olie Kolzig. Players have their backs to the play sometimes, so they rely on their teammates and the goaltender to verbally shout out instructions, and the same goes with the players talking to the goalie. I was reminded of this watching the Caps play the Penguins on Wednesday. I spoke to former Hershey coach Troy Mann last season about Jonsson-Fjallby and he said Jonsson-Fjallby reminded him of Hagelin, a speedy bottom-six type of forward who can be dangerous on the penalty kill. The goal was originally awarded to Hobbs, but a review determined that Ikonen had redirected the puck giving him his first.

Expats If you are trying to find a room in Amsterdam I feel your pain. I am in the process now, and it is probably one of the most difficult things to do. Finding a room is like poking yourself in the eye with a sharp object. Why a kijkavond is a bit like an X-Factor audition: A kijkavond is designed so that Dutch people can be as efficient as possible. Because there is such a huge demand for housing, the Dutch can actually do this, and it does make sense. They introduce themselves and then you get to see the room and the rest of the apartment. Some of the candidates will which means less competition to battle it out with. Next, you have to tell them about yourself. You have between 30 seconds and two minutes in which to do this. Timings may vary from kijkavond to kijkavond. The judges then decide whether they want to ask more questions " this varies between kijkavonds, but sometimes they only ask you to tell them about yourself. They will also ask if you have any questions about the room, and a few of the candidates ask questions about bills, or whether they can register. The judges thank everyone for coming, and tell us that the successful candidate will receive a whatsapp message. They say they will be in touch and then they will ignore you unless you are their favourite candidate. They will probably take a vote on it before they reply, and one of the housemates will root for the underdog, but in the end the one taking all of the notes will make the final decision, because they are the Simon Cowell of kijkavonds. Someone once told me that they took a bottle of wine with them to the Kijkavond and asked a lot of questions about the people living there. I think wine probably does help. If you are in the process of finding a room, maybe we can go for a beer and comiserate each other on these terrible kijkavonds. Tell me about your worst experiences.

While the Jedi Temple that the Four Masters had erected was being expanded, the Council met at the top of a lone tower, which stood in the center of a broad plaza as of BBY. It was at this time that the august body reassigned a group of Jedi seers to separate stations after they were unable to capture Padawan Zayne Carrick, the supposed criminal behind the Padawan Massacre. While the Jedi and the Galactic Republic succeeded in defeating the leaders of the Sith Empire, fragments of Sith continued to harass the Order. Abandoning the Council Spire on Coruscant, the remaining Jedi Masters were mostly hunted down and killed. After the end of the Purge and the rebuilding of the Order by the once exiled Jedi, the Council Spire and chamber were added onto the steadily expanding Jedi Temple. While the Council made use of this location for several centuries, it was ultimately destroyed by the resurgent Sith Empire when a group of Sith Lords ransacked Coruscant. After over a thousand years of fundraising and rebuilding, the Galactic Senate was finally able to raise enough tax money to finish the Council Spires by BBY. As the Temple furnace was rigged to explode, the Dark Jedi attacked Jinn in hopes that the Jedi would not figure out his plot before it was too late. During the Clone Wars, the Council Chamber would host war meetings and discussions tended to get more heated rather than productive. Darth Vader led the 51st Legion into the Temple and began to systematically slaughter its occupants. Within the Council Chamber, a group of younglings had taken refuge from the onslaught in the levels below. Begging the former Jedi for assistance, the younglings gathered around the Sith Lord before he cut them down in cold blood. Following the abandonment of the Temple the chamber saw no use as the Jedi Council was dissolved. A few months after the rise of the Galactic Empire, Vader was forced to return to the High Council Chamber, alongside Lieutenant Laurita Tohm, to access records of an event regarding the disappearance of several rogue padawans that Skywalker had arrested, and learned of the location of the Ghost Prison. Climbing the ancient stairs that led to the summit of the Tower, Olin and the Sith entered the once prestigious room to continue the duel, using the chairs and floor tiles as projectiles. Vader soon followed, leaving the chamber to lie in silence for several years. Further reeking havoc in the room, Starkiller defeated the simulacrum and left the chamber in increased distress. The ancient edifice was even re-inhabited briefly, as members of the new Jedi Order searched the destroyed hall for any information on the teachings of the old Order. The new Order would clear the rubble away and erect a small praxeum in their place on the roof of the Ziggurat; [16] though this too would be lost during the Yuuzhan Vong War. Using blueprints salvaged from the old Archives the Reconstruction Authority erected the new Temple to near-exact specifications; though a new transparisteel pyramid concealed the restored Council towers. This desk would later be removed as the Council returned to the old style of simply recording the audio of the proceedings. Two years later the chamber would host a gathering of the Council, as well as other Masters of the Order, in which Interim Grand Master Kenth Hamner announced his decision to subtly subvert the Alliance government and increase support for the Jedi through different media opportunities. During this meeting, several additional chairs were brought up to the chamber in order to accommodate all the Masters on Coruscant. These guards were thwarted by the manipulating mouth of Knight Leia Organa Solo, who forced Korr to allow her to speak to the Council. Located at the peak of the southeast tower of the Temple, this circular chamber granted its occupants a rare glimpse of Coruscant. The Chamber itself existed in several incarnations over the years as the Temple grew, expanded, moved, and relocated. However, the room has always kept the basic circular shape accessed by a single turbolift, high arching windows, and a ring of twelve cushioned chairs for the members of the august body. Each of the stone seats were equipped with a holoprojector that could be used when a Council member was attending the meeting from a distant world. The simple chamber was equipped with a holoprojector capable of displaying images in the center of the room, as the Council did during the examination of the Padawan Massacre. Similar to the previous meeting room the chamber was made of dark stone with a large, polished rock at the center of the circle. At the end of the trial, Surik drove her lightsaber into the center stone and left the Chamber indefinitely. The room would come into exist in its final, most recognizable form after the Temple expansion of BBY. Erected atop the Council Spire of the Temple, the chamber was ringed by a small corridor set between the inner and outer sets of transparisteel windows which granted a panoramic view of the cityscape. The floor was decorated with a natural and circular motif symbolizing harmony and balance between the Jedi, the Council, and the Force. These antennas were responsible for feeding data to Jedi Command. However great, opulent drapes were hung over the windows and a desk was installed for use by the Secretary of the Council. However, both features were removed due to the pompousness of the drapes and the outmoding of the Secretary position.
