A book of slightly more than pages which was written by Dr. Sam Rehnborg, son of Nutrilite founder, Carl Rehnborg. It is a book to share with the world on the past, present and future of Nutrilite. It only took me two and half days to finish this book from front to back. Yes, just two and the half days! Nutrilite is a well-known supplement brand founded by Dr. Carl Rehnborg in the United States. He started to explore the idea of extracting concentrated plant-based nutrient since His journey to China from has led him to see the importance of nutrients and role of vitamins in future. Carl Rehnborg, during his younger days in China. He was the first representative to bring in Carnation Evaporated Milk into China. He was daring and experimented with whatever resources that he can get during the difficult times in China, just to ensure his body gets sufficient nutrition. His experiments of weird concoctions included rusty nails, bones, greens from the roadside and many more. From the very beginning, Carl was already very interested in alfalfa. Until today, alfalfa is one of the main ingredients used in Nutrilites supplements. If a product is not good, it would not sustain that long in the market. Not just one market, but globally! All the initial experiment were done inside a boat shed. Despite all the downfalls and obstacles that he came across during his journey in the creation of plant-based food supplement, he was very persistent with his idea and never gave up. It still exists and is one of the best supplement available. Even international sportsmen is consuming Double X. Besides alfalfa, Nutrilite grow its own acerola cherry in their very own certified organic farms. My parents have visited Nutrilite farm in ADA Michigan few times and have the opportunity to see how they process the supplements from raw materials to finished supplement. Every stage requires extreme care to ensure the nutrition are not lost during the process. Nutrilite uses concentrated ingredients in their supplements. Since the early days, Carl emphasizes his distributors to visit the farm to get to know what is Nutrilite all about. It is only by understanding and seeing the real thing you will be able to get the whole picture of his idea. The food supplement kicked off when people started to share with each other on the effectiveness of the supplements. It all started from word-of-mouth. Although at some point Carl Rehnborg did try to sell it on the shelves in pharmacies, the products were not moving. Carl understood that his products are not like any other products in the market. People need to be informed of the products, the special ingredients in the supplement and all the benefits that the body can get. Carl knew instantly that he is not there to just be a salesman. He needs to be more than that. His customers need to be educated. Therefore, he started to use back the most original and effective way; direct selling. Now, Nutrilite is part of Amway. Carl Rehnborg, a man who is very business-minded yet has a caring heart to contribute back to the society. He has been sticking hard to his idea of plant-based food supplement because he believes in it and has confidence that this is what people would need in the future and be part of optimal health. Return to Content Writing tenses: How do you mix past, present and future tense without making the reader giddy? Read this simple guide for answers to these questions and more: The simple tense merely conveys action in the time narrated. Sarah ran to the store. Sarah runs to the store. Sarah had run to the store. Sarah has run to the store. Sarah will have run to the store. Here are some tips for using the tenses in a novel: Decide which writing tenses would work best for your story The majority of novels are written using simple past tense and the third person: The present tense, for example, has the virtue of: Each action happens now Simplicity: You run your usual route to the store, but as you round the corner you come upon a disturbing sight. When you attempt to return it, you get sent on a wild goose chase after the book you want. In a thriller novel, for example, you can write tense scenes in first person for a sense of present danger: He sits up in bed, tensed and listening. Avoid losing clarity when mixing tenses Because stories show us chains and sequences of events, often we need to jump back and forth between earlier and present scenes and times. The fragmented break in continuity makes it hard to place actions in relation to each other. Sarah runs her usual route to the store. As she turned the corner, she came upon a disturbing scene. Le Guin offers excellent advice on mixing past and present in her writing manual, Steering the Craft: Mix the tenses for colour and variety Le Guin raises a good point about writing tenses. Le Guin describes the downside of telling a story almost exclusively in present tense: The wealth and complexity of our verb forms is part of the color of the language. Using only one tense is like having a whole set of oil paints and using only pink. That morning, she had run her usual route to the store. As she turned the corner, she had come upon a disturbing scene. Now, safely home, she decided to lie down, all the while trying to get that scene out of her mind. Mixing the tenses can help to show the cause and effect of interlocking events. It gives it an irrevocable quality, the quality of a haunting, living-on-in-memory event. The different moods are useful because they can show possibilities and scenarios that might have happened, or might still happen, under different circumstances. Here are examples for correct uses for each of the tenses in active voice: If she runs to the storeâ€¦ Past tense: If she ran to the storeâ€¦ Future tense: If she should run to the storeâ€¦ Present perfect tense: If she has run to the storeâ€¦ Past perfect tense: If she had run to the storeâ€¦ Future perfect tense: If she should have run to the storeâ€¦ Think of this mood as setting up a possibility. She may run to the store. She may have run to the store. She might have run to the store. These verb moods in conjunction with tense are useful. Pick a paragraph by an author and rewrite in each of the tenses. It cost four hundred dollars and looks like it was wrestled from the mouth of a tiger. The sweater had been folded into a loaf-sized bundle, and she stroked it, the way you might a freshly dead rabbit. It cost four hundred dollars and looked like it was wrestled from the mouth of a tiger. The sweater was folded into a loaf-sized bundle, and she stroked it, the way you might a freshly dead rabbit.
