For several days, the family would take exhaustive turns watching over Kwan-Ho. Man-Cho would burn a fair amount of his money to entertain Kwan-Ho as she gambled everything away. Despite watching over her, she still attempted suicide via drug overdose. Man Cho attempt to change her mind by challenging her to do a bungee base jump off Macau Tower. Despite his intense fear of heights, he did it in attempts to cheer her up and it partially worked as he peed in his own pants while falling down. Throughout this time though, Kei-Kei would experience doubt and confusion. She thought she had Man-Cho, but ever-since the return of Kwan-Ho, she has been sidelined and has been frustrated over the situation. As time past, Kwan-Ho would find a reason to live again and resumed the old life she had with her family. One fateful night, a major rain storm happened. Perfectly covered within the mud, no one would know Kwan-Ho was trapped inside except for Kei-Kei. Some time would pass and Man Cho has been suffering from occasional blurred vision. He has been keeping the matter to himself to his family to avoid their worries. Man Cho has been suffering from a growing blood clot after hitting his head from saving Kwan-Ho from that landslide. The family eventually finds out after he faints in front of everyone. The family agrees to the risk as not taking the surgery will mean certain death. After the surgery, Man Cho wakes up to tell Kwan-Ho that everything is fine. Man Cho wrote a note for himself to recite to Kwan-Ho when he awakens, suggesting he lost his memory, but he wanted to calm her worries even if it means a delayed inevitability. The story would have an open ending, unsure of the fate of Man-Cho and Kwan-Ho.

Return of the Cuckoo (Chinese: 情越海岸线) is a Hong Kong-Chinese romantic melodrama film adaptation of the Return of the Cuckoo series, a episode TVB drama broadcast in November 12, Return of the Cuckoo drama version Original run: July 10 August 4, Quick Rundown: Picking up where the drama ended, Chuk Kwan Ho returns to Macau from America due to unforeseen circumstances. The whole neighborhood and her family, including her faux brother, Man Chor, is there to welcome her back with open arms, but things are no longer the way they once were. As time passes, Kwan Ho and her beloved Chor Gor Gor are forced to face multiple obstacles together while wrestling with their feelings for each other. And while I was pretty content with the conclusion of the drama, the hopeless romantic and drama-loving part of me welcomed the film version of Return of the Cuckoo with open arms. But instead of receiving a warm hug back from one of my favorite TVB couples, all I got was a sucker punch to the heart. One, I am reviewing this from the perspective of someone who has seen and loved the original drama. Sorry, but we probably all assumed that already, right? I think my disappointment with this film does indeed stem from being a fan of the drama because this extension of the original story felt so unnecessary. Instead of giving the happy ending that fans wanted, the film further screws the characters over and makes the situation way worse than how it was. The one they give us in the film is melodramatic and manipulative, which I believe is far worse than just bittersweet. Ending aside, the rest of the film also felt too choppy and rushed. It felt like the filmmakers were trying to cram in storylines that would be better suited for a episodes drama than a film that ran for less than two hours. Instead, there were nonstop obstacles that would rear its ugly head at the most inopportune times, but then get quickly resolved to give way to the next one. But while this pace and plotting could have worked in a longer drama format, it definitely overwhelmed the movie. Besides the actual plotline s of the movie, it did feel good to be reunited with the cast and Macau setting from the original drama. Everyone pretty much looked the way they did 15 years ago, but with the addition of a few more wrinkles. Charmaine and Chilam continue to look great together onscreen, and the chemistry between them remains. I wish the older actors, like Nancy Sit, had more screentime because they were kind of pushed to the side and just intermittently popped up to show their faces. Joe Chen is the only new cast member, and she was serviceable in her role. Good call, filmmakers, even though her character was unnecessary. In fact, if I had known what does happen to them post-drama, no way in hell would I want to watch. Gone is the playful, lighthearted feel of the drama that was capable of both mending and breaking hearts. In place of it is just pure melodrama. Return to the streets of Macau but via the drama and not the movie. She was probably more excited than me to watch this movie, but we share similar sentiments about how it actually turned out. Although she thought it was an entertaining movie, there were just too many small plotlines that became more distracting than purposeful. And while the ending was certainly a major disappointment for fans of the drama [especially ones hoping to see a happily ever after], she thought that it was a good twist. True fan right there! Charmaine and Chilam co-starred in the popular drama, Point of No Return , and the film version of Triumph in the Skies They, however, did not share any scenes in the latter. Charmaine and Steven co-starred in the drama, Perish in the Name of Love The sign language used in the film was under the supervision of the charity organization, Silence. Chilam is their sign language ambassador.

Chapter 4 : Return of the Cuckoo (Film Review) | Drama for Real

Return of the Cuckoo is a movie that didn't need to be made and probably shouldn't have been. I was excited for it, but probably more for nostalgic reasons than actually caring to know what happens to the characters after the drama's conclusion.
