For contenders like the New York Yankees, Oakland Athletics and Milwaukee Brewers, landing a top-tier starting pitcher has to be a goal. Other postseason teams, like the Colorado Rockies and Atlanta Braves, can use some late-inning security. The Houston Astros should give strong consideration towards bringing an MVP candidate back to where he grew up. The Philadelphia Phillies should try to do the same and hook the biggest fish in the pond. This is where they should end up. The Mets have gone over the last two seasons. Worse, the farm system is barren. That needs to be changed. The Milwaukee offense and bullpen are fantastic. The starting rotation is deep, but lacks a true ace. Acquiring deGrom would require a few prospects. The primary one New York should covet is Keston Hiura. These two teams coming together would make a lot of sense. Trading him could bring a wealth of talent to the organization. The Astros are pretty close to an ideal trade partner. Justin Verlander and Gerrit Cole are both set to be free agents after George Springer, meanwhile, will become a free agent following the season. So, while the season may not be the final stand for this Houston team, a sense of urgency has to exist. But Oakland has the relievers to make that a loss like that hurt far less. The Braves have a very good young team. The one thing that they lack is a dominant closer. If the Indians are looking to go into more of a full rebuild, Oakland and Atlanta both have the farm systems to help get that going. Washington Nationals acquire J. Realmuto who hit. Additionally, the looming possibility of losing Bryce Harper in free agency means that Washington will need to retool the offense. Realmuto is a good centerpiece for that. The Nationals should not sit on their hands with this one. Realmuto wants out and not surprisingly, has reportedly drawn a great deal of interest. The Braves, a division rival, are one of the interested teams. Miami is looking for young, controllable talent. A package centered on Erick Feede and Luis Garcia is a good place to start. But even then, the deal should be strongly considered. Keeping Merrifield only makes sense if the Royals think that they can contend again by the season at the latest. Realistically, contending by feels like a more of a best-case scenario. Dealing him and loading up with more young talent is just more sensible. As luck would have it, the Dodgers have a lot of young talent. Additionally, they can really use someone like Merrifield. As talented as the team is, Los Angeles is a little too dependent on the long ball. The Dodgers hit their share of home runs in the playoffs. To make those home runs really count, guys need to be on base. But the Giants are coming off of consecutive losing seasons and have a farm system that desperately needs to be rebuilt. So, a trade needs to at least be heavily explored. New York is a good trade partner. Given that he is a pending free agent, Bumgarner only makes sense as a trade target for a team that can realistically win the World Series in The Yankees are absolutely a legitimate contender. In return, the Giants could reasonably ask for a package centered around Miguel Andujar or less likely, Gleyber Torres. Bumgarner for Andujar may not work as a straight trade. There are good, non-baseball reasons to want Russell replaced. The Cubs need to upgrade the offense. Anthony Rizzo and Kris Bryant will occupy the corner infield spots. We like the duo of Gennett at second and Javier Baez at short much better than Russell at short with Baez at second. Gennett is a much better hitter. He needs to be a DH in the AL. The Twins are a fit. The Reds need pitching. While Jose Berrios from the Twins would be ideal, getting him for a pending free agent like Gennett is not likely. Castellanos will be a free agent after Barring an extension, keeping him around makes no sense. Now, Castellanos will be only 27 on Opening Day. So, an extension would make some sense. But this team is also really just beginning a rebuild. Getting some pieces back for Castellanos would be more beneficial in the long term. That has be what Detroit is looking towards. Tampa is a logical fit. The Rays won 90 games in As far as who the Tigers would get, a prospect like Jesus Sanchez or Brett Honeywell would be a good place to start. If Seattle is really open for business, Diaz will be 25 on Opening Day. He could be a part of the future. But Diaz could bring in a major haul. Wade Davis struggled in his first year in Colorado. He did save 43 games, but also had a 4. Some of that can be attributed to Coors Field. Davis is making a lot of money and normally, that would complicate things. But Diaz has one year of team control left. Nobody is suggesting that this deal would be easy to make. But when we really assess the situation, the Halos have made the playoffs only once in his career and have had three consecutive losing seasons. Los Angeles needs a significant overhaul. The cold reality is that right now, trading Trout is the best way to make that happen. Figuring out how Philadelphia would make this work is not easy. It would start with either Rhys Hoskins or Odubel Herrera. Top prospect Sixto Sanchez would probably need to be involved. Even that feels like a lowball offer for someone like Trout. It would be an expensive trade, for sure. But the Phillies also have to do something drastic. Making a deal for the best player in baseball would change that in a big way.
