Toponymy[edit] The name Suthriganaweorc [2] or Suthringa geweorche [3] is recorded for the area in the 10th-century Anglo-Saxon document known as the Burghal Hidage [3] and means "fort of the men of Surrey " [2] or "the defensive work of the men of Surrey". The southern location is in reference to the City of London to the north, Southwark being at the southern end of London Bridge. Until , the county of Surrey included the present-day London Borough of Southwark, yet the name has been used for various areas of civil administration, including the ancient Borough of Southwark, the Metropolitan Borough of Southwark and the current London Borough of Southwark. Southwark was also simultaneously referred to as the ward of Bridge Without when administered by the City from to and as an aldermanry until Recent excavation has revealed prehistoric activity including evidence of early ploughing , burial mounds and ritual activity. The area was originally a series of islands in the River Thames. This formed the best place to bridge the Thames and the area became an important part of Londinium , owing its importance to its position as the endpoint of the Roman London Bridge. Londinium was abandoned at the end of the Roman occupation in the early 5th century and both the city and its bridge collapsed in decay. Archaeologically, evidence of settlement is replaced by a largely featureless soil called the Dark Earth which probably although this is contested represents an urban area abandoned. Southwark appears to recover only during the time of King Alfred and his successors. Sometime about , the burh of Southwark was created and the Roman city area reoccupied. It was probably fortified to defend the bridge and hence the reemerging City of London to the north. This defensive role is highlighted by the use of the bridge in as a defence against King Sweyn and his son King Cnut by Ethelred the Unready and again, in , against Duke William the Conqueror. He failed to force the bridge during the Norman conquest of England , but Southwark was devastated. Southwark appears in the Domesday Book of within the hundred of Brixton as held by several Surrey manors. During the early Middle Ages , Southwark developed and was one of the four Surrey towns which returned Members of Parliament for the first commons assembly in This area therefore became the entertainment district for London, with attractions such as bull and bear-baiting. It also hosted a concentration of brothels. The Rose was set up by Philip Henslowe , and soon became a popular place of entertainment for all classes of Londoners. Both Christopher Marlowe and William Shakespeare , two of the finest writers of the Elizabethan age, worked at the Rose. In the Globe Theatre , in which Shakespeare was a shareholder, was erected on the Bankside in the Liberty of the Clink. It burned down in , and was rebuilt in , only to be closed by the Puritans in and subsequently pulled down not long thereafter. On 26 May , ten years after the Great Fire of London , a great fire broke out, which continued for 17 hours before houses were blown up to create fire breaks. William Hogarth depicted this fair in his engraving of Southwark Fair One other local family is of note, the Harvards. He migrated to the Massachusetts Colony and left his library and the residue of his will to the new college there, named after him as its first benefactor. Urbanisation[edit] In the first railway in the London area was created, the London and Greenwich Railway , originally terminating at Spa Road and later extended west to London Bridge. The first deep-level underground tube line in London was the City and South London Railway , now the Bank branch of the Northern line , opened in , running from King William Street south through Borough to Stockwell. Southwark, since , is also now served by Southwark , Bermondsey and London Bridge stations on the Jubilee line. Local governance[edit] A map showing the wards of Southwark Metropolitan Borough as they appeared in The St George the Martyr parish was large enough to be governed by a vestry. In the area became part of the County of London. The eastern parishes that had formed the St Olave District instead became part of the Metropolitan Borough of Bermondsey. In the two boroughs were combined with the Metropolitan Borough of Camberwell to form the current London Borough of Southwark. The Livery Companies also ensured that they had jurisdiction over the area. From the Norman period manorial organisation obtained through major lay and ecclesiastic magnates. Southwark still has vestiges of this because of the connection with the City of London. In the City acquired from Edward III the original vill of Southwark and this was also described as "the borough". In these were sold to the City. After many decades of petitioning, in Southwark was incorporated into the City of London as the ward of Bridge Without. However, the Alderman was appointed by the Court of Aldermen and no Common Councilmen were ever elected. These manors are still constituted by the City under a Bailiff and Steward with their Courts Leet and View of Frankpledge Juries and Officers which still meetâ€”their annual assembly being held in November under the present High Steward the Recorder of London. The Ward and Aldermanry were effectively abolished in , by merging it with the Ward of Bridge Within. These manorial courts were preserved under the Administration of Justice Act Southwark is the location of City Hall , the administrative headquarters of the Greater London Authority and the meeting place of the London Assembly and Mayor of London. Since , Southwark London Borough Council has its main offices at Tooley Street, having moved administrative staff from the town hall in Camberwell. Geography[edit] View from Tower Bridge towards Southwark: City Hall and the rest of More London development in the foreground, and the Shard London Bridge skyscraper under construction at the time of the photo in the background. In common with much of the south bank of the Thames , the Borough has seen extensive regeneration in the last decade. Declining wharfage trade, light industry and factories have given way to residential development, shops, restaurants, galleries, bars and most notably major office developments housing international headquarters of accountancy, legal and other professional services consultancies, most notably along London Bridge City and More London between Tooley Street and the riverside. The area is in easy walking distance of the City and the West End. As such it has become a major business centre with many national and international corporations, professional practices and publishers locating to the area. Borough Market is a well-developed visitor attraction and has grown in size. The adjacent units have been converted and form a gastronomic focus for London. The Borough is generally an area of mixed development, with council estates, major office developments, social housing and high value residential gated communities side by side with each other.
