With each passing season, it seems like teams are in a race to come out with a new look or special uniforms -- anything that will make the school that much more attractive to possible recruits. So, if uniforms are that important, we must give them the traditional college football treatment: These rankings are based on absolutely nothing but my personal taste. Today, we rank the uniforms of the Pac Time to channel our inner Heidi Klum. When Arizona State last rebranded back in , I initially liked the new look. I dug the pitchfork logo on the helmets, and I thought a lot of the possible combinations would work well. In practice, however, I have not enjoyed the uniforms nearly as much as I thought I would. Everything else just feels too aggressive. It stands out from so many other logos that seem too simple. Now, there are times when boring uniforms are good. Boring looks good on some teams, but those teams tend to be the ones that win a lot. Cal suffers from a lot of the same problems that Washington State does when it comes to its uniforms. The blue and yellow work well together, but they could work a lot better. The Bears could probably afford to feature white a bit more because I tend to favor their road uniforms more than the home ones. It all just reminds me of the crappy artwork I used to do in MS Paint while I was still in junior high. It also won plenty of games, which helped. Sure, the early stuff may have been great, but you can only stay original and good for so long before you start to lose some of the magic. Remember earlier when I was talking about how simple can be effective if you win? Though a recent turn to an all-black look has certainly been a disappointment, and keeps the Cardinal from getting any higher than sixth here. I feel like that was only there because whoever designed the look believed they had to do something to convince their boss that they actually put in some work on it. Which is a shame, because I want to put the Huskies higher than this. Just not the best look in the Pac I like them very much. I would proudly don the the cardinal and gold of the Trojans of Southern California. Well, sorry, I love the look. Like, if you were married to a five-star chef, would you be going to McDonalds three times a week? Well, UCLA keeps going to McDonalds with their alternates, but even in the face of so much stupidity, those blue and gold beauties overcome the eyesores.
