Beschreibung bei Amazon William Diehl was an American photojournalist and a bestselling author of photojournalism, mystery and thriller novels. William was 50 years old and an already successful photojournalist when he began his writing career. The book was adapted into a thriller drama movie by same name directed by Burt Reynolds shot on his hometown of Atlanta, Georgia. Following the positive acclaim and the success of his first novel, Diehl moved to St. The author died at Emory University Hospital on November 24th, and at the time of death, he was a resident of Woodstock, Georgia working on his 10th novel. He is about to push through to the highest position in the world. Hotchins is a candidate for the presidency of the United States. He cannot suspect that the woman he loves and the man whose money he depends on secrets that can be broken in one go. Victor Delarosa, international toy magnate and secret lender of Hotchins, goes to great lengths to disguise his dark past. For Sharky, detective, who is constantly in conflict with the police establishment because of his obstinate nature, it seems a routine task initially. Until he has heard the audio tapes, on which Domino by telephone satisfies the erotic wishes of her expensive customers. His work becomes an obsession. The narrative is set in Atlanta with some short chapters of the novel set in Italy and Hong Kong that eventually tie into the main story. First published in , the book explores the tech and the people who lived during that era of the 20th century. The characters are beautifully woven, entertaining and at the same time believable. The good guys are really good, and the bad guys are also extremely evil. This is the kind of novel that keeps the readers ever-increasing suspense and builds up a colorful and fiery climax that would otherwise be too expensive for a horror movie. There is an inclusion of explicit sex scenes, and lots of violence but both handled very well by the author. One of the best things you will love about the novel is the idea of every real people, people that readers can relate living upon the conspiracy of movers and shakers. Show of Evil A few meters next to the cradle the disfigured body of Linda Balfout is formless against the wall. Ten years ago Martin saw the same signs " on the body of the murdered archbishop of Chicago. As a young, brilliant lawyer, Martin saved Aaron Stampler, the schizophrenic prime suspect in the murder case, from the electric chair. Since then, Aaron sits in a heavily guarded cell, without any contact with the outside world. Then another corpse is found. Martin is convinced that the brilliant Aaron has something to do with the horrendous murders. Aaron fooled Martin ten years ago " now he will make sure that the beast is made harmless for good. Now it is a place where two decades later, detective Zeke Bannon investigates the death that seems a terrible accident. The year is when Verna Wilensky is electrocuted in her bathtub leaving behind a middle-class life but with no survivors and a bank account packed with millions of dollars. Mysterious checks have regularly come to her for more than 20 decades, most of these checks drawn from a bank based in San Pietro, a town formerly known as Eureka. Eureka was once a town that used to be a bootleggers haven and also a gangster dream. Now the town has been rebuilt, and its where sheriff Thomas is launching a big to be the next governor. Complex in its links between the past and the present but rich in historical details, and filled with nonstop action are the hallmarks of this great narrative. The mystery itself is excellent, and the characters are well carefully woven and uniquely presented. Jack Reacher is back! Family secrets come back to haunt Reacher when he decides to visit the town his father was born in. Because when he visits there he finds out no-one with the last name of Reacher has ever lived there. It leaves him wondering - did his father ever live there? Chapter 2 : Primal Fear () - IMDb

William Diehl was an American novelist and photojournalist. Diehl was fifty years old and already a successful photographer and journalist when he decided to begin a writing career.

The cause was an aortic aneurysm, said a longtime friend, Don Smith. Diehl was a former journalist and photographer who became a novelist late in life after a dispirited awakening at his 50th birthday party. Over the next three decades he wrote nine novels that appealed to popular tastes with plotlines fueled by murder, greed, romance and other forms of mayhem. He was believed to have been nearly finished with his 10th novel when he was hospitalized last week. It is titled "Seven Ways to Die. According to family lore, Mae West was once his baby-sitter, before she became a Hollywood sex symbol. After the war, he graduated from the University of Missouri with a degree in creative writing and history and in moved to Atlanta, where he joined the staff of the Atlanta Constitution. He got the job after staking out the newspaper lobby and waiting for editor Ralph McGill to walk by. I told him I had been a ball turret gunner He said anybody who had gone through that deserved a job, so he hired me as an obit writer. In he became the first managing editor of Atlanta magazine. He taught himself how to take photographs for his stories and later worked as a freelance photographer. He met Martin Luther King Jr. He was attacked one night in while accompanying King on a tour of Mississippi by two assailants, who slashed his throat with a straight razor. The assault left a six-inch scar under his jaw. The turning point of his life came in a moment characterized more by bathos than pathos, however. He had no permanent job and was on his second marriage in when he turned The cake, too pretty to eat, melted into a gooey mess, which struck Diehl as a metaphor for his life. It was turned into a successful movie directed by Burt Reynolds, who also starred as Sgt. Diehl had a cameo role as a pimp. Diehl drew on memories of his throat slashing to add grit and horror to a passage in "Primal Fear. But others said that any shortcomings were outweighed by the riveting action and what New York Times reviewer Karen Ray called "an ending that is truly socko. His last novel was "Eureka," published in Somewhat of a departure from his earlier works, it is a historical thriller that covers the first four decades of the s. Publishers Weekly called it "his best novel ever. He wound up having six toes amputated in , but the pain subsided and he was able to complete the novel. Simons Island, where he lived for 20 years with his third wife, Virginia Gunn, a former Atlanta television reporter. Disenchantment with his medical care was one of the main reasons they moved to a six-acre farm in Woodstock, about 45 minutes north of Atlanta, five years ago. In addition to Gunn, Diehl is survived by five children and eight grandchildren.
