In the common sense, we can identify with the need to protect creative works of art such as books, poems, inventions, and the like but what we may not be aware that someone can also copywrite your name and in effect have ownership of everything created in that name. Furthermore, you find out unbeknown to you that everything you did was done under the name of a corporation. Does this sound like a nightmare or does this sound like real life? Well that sound you hear is your wake up call. A Hypothetical Question - Are you the beneficiary? The UCC as its known has been adopted in virtually all the countries in the world. Its what all your laws are based on, its what all your lawyers are trained in, its what all your courts base their decisions on. Consider the UCC as the rule book or the operating and procedural manual for all commercial activity or all exchange of energy in the form of all intellectual property, goods and services. You see the UCC is an artificial creation, in the sense it is man made laws or codes governing commerce. Everything that operates in this artificial world is contractual. In other words in order to receive something you must give up something of equal value. In that sense a contract promotes fair exchange or commerce. All communication is conducted on paper and in this artificial world whenever you respond to or sign your name you are entering into contract whether you are aware of it or not. The presumption is that you are fully aware of what you are doing and obligating your self to. Commerce will not work if either party does not fulfill their obligations in contract. And so rules of conduct or procedure are of prime importance. Technically, not honouring or fulfilling ones obligations puts one in dishonour. This is quite serious as your ability to function in commerce hinges on your reputation to be true to your obligations. If you are not the owner of your name in commerce then you are not the owner of all you created under that name and you are not the one who benefits from the results of your efforts you are not the beneficiary. In effect you are exchanging energy for perceived benefits that may or may not serve you. One of the pitfalls in contract is unwittingly trading your natural birth rights for perceived benefits which your already have in common law. Even though the Copyright Notice does not depend on the UCC for its validity and enforceability, its provisions are written in strict accordance with UCC guidelines for facilitating easy and thorough non-judicial foreclosure proceedings on any who would attempt commercial gain at your expense through unauthorized use of your TRADE NAME. Doing Business Under Your Trade Name Corporate names, corporately colored names, trade names, marks, trademarks, and service marks are private property of someone, and all can be claimed as such. Trademarks Trademark is defined as: Common-law trade-mark Common-law trade-mark is defined as: This is why you need not consult statutory law and secure approval from any governmental agency in appropriating claiming and enforcing a common-law copyright on your trademark, i.
